Training exercise plane crash kills Marine reservists

*Witnesses saw two passengers parachute
from the flaming jets*

ARLINGTON, Ore. — Two Marine reservists are dead after two F-18 fighter jets collided Wednesday during a training exercise over the Columbia River in northeastern Oregon, authorities said.

One of the bodies was found on the Oregon side of the river, the other on the Washington side, according to Chris Fitzsimmons, a deputy sheriff in Gilliam County.

Capt. Michael Braibish with the Oregon National Guard said at least one of those dead was a pilot; the other one is either a pilot or a weapons operator, he said.

An additional pilot survived, and was being evaluated by doctors in the emergency room at Mid-Columbia Medical Center, hospital spokeswoman Yvonne Arbogast said.

She said she did not have a list of injuries, but said the man was speaking and coherent.

Nancy Corey, a spokeswoman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Seattle, said the jets were based at the Miramar Naval Air Station, which is in San Diego, Calif.

The planes were on low altitude training exercise from a national guard base in Portland to a bombing range in Boardman, Ore., said Lt. Col. Bill Nielson with the Oregon Air National Guard. One plane was a single seater, while the other had two seats, he said.

Andrew David, 34, of Goldendale, Wash., was casting out his fishing nets on the river with his father-in-law and nephew when they heard the noise of the jets colliding. He looked up, and saw the flames above their heads.

David said he saw two parachutes, one of which landed in the water. When they speeded over to try and help the man, David said, it was clear that the parachutist was dead.

"When you see something like this, you don't expect to be right in the middle of it," David said. "Debris was dropping by us. He was pretty beat up. It was pretty bad. We don't want to see anything like this again."

Fitzsimmons, the Gilliam County deputy sheriff, said debris landed as far as eight miles from Arlington.

Debris from the incident could include fuel, metal and composite carbon fibers, said Chuck Donaldson, emergency response manager for the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality.

Donaldson said that anyone who comes across debris should leave it alone and report it to their local sheriff, who would then contact the military.

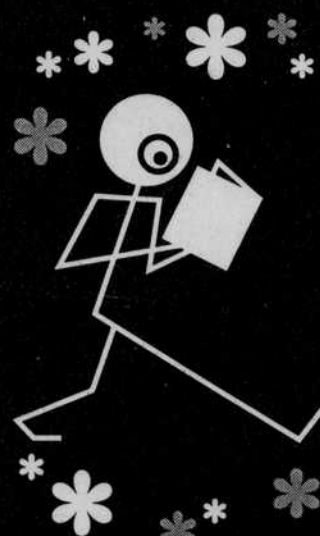

The F-18 is used by the Navy and Marine Corps and several countries including Canada, Australia, Spain, Kuwait, Switzerland, Finland and Malaysia.

In the American arsenal the F-18 replaced the F-4 Phantom II, the A-7 Corsair and the A-6 Intruder as those planes were phased out of service in the 1990s.

They are designed for air-to-air and air-to-ground combat.
