Roetman: Quarterback stays respectful after Seattle loss endured, after all the dropped passes and the agony of coming up short in the playoffs once again, he stood up and announced who was behind Seattle's postseason shortcoming.

Himself.

"Bobby was coming up fast," Hasselbeck said after the game. "He flashed to me, and I tried to get him the ball. I probably threw it too hard, and I made it a little tougher than it needed to be for him."

Say what?

You threw for 341 yards, hit your receiver in the hands on the final play of the game, and it's your fault the team lost?

While most of his teammates failed to improve during a season of disappointment, Hasselbeck grew into the leader every team wants and needs at quarterback. He took the heat for a teammate who couldn't come through with the game on the line. That's the kind of guy I want watching my back.

It's a shame that more attention goes toward an endzone celebration.
