DATING: ANYTHING BUT BY THE BOOK

"The Fun Book For Couples: 102 Ways to Celebrate Love," by Melina Gerosa Bellows, helps couples plan romantic, fun and entertaining activities when they can't think of anything to do or are tired of going out for dinner and a movie. Among her suggestions:

- Create a Sunday-morning ritual, such as doing the crossword puzzle in bed or making Belgian waffles and fresh-squeezed juice. Promise each other not to do anything before 3 p.m.
- Start a monthly girl's or guy's night out.
- Act like kids by going to a local playground, jumping on a trampoline or playing catch.
- Buy a box of beautifully engraved stationery and leave them a personal note on the first card.
- Plan a room-service weekend in your home and refuse to answer the phone or check e-mail. Stock up beforehand with beverages, gourmet chocolate and movies.

- Send something thoughtful to your sweetie's office or leave it in their car for no reason.
- Make the Sunday-night meal special. Light candles and put on music to set the mood. Have good conversation and get ready for the week together.
- Start a collection together: wine glasses, local artwork, picture frames, old books, etc.
- Pretend you've never met, and then meet at a bar to play out the scene.
- Go to a public place and people-watch. Invent stories about the people you're watching.
- Buy CDs from their favorite artist.
- Overdo their favorite treat. If they love Girl Scout cookies, order them a case. If they love ice-cream cake, order them one.
- Volunteer for a cause you are both interested in.

small they are.

"Showing affection and showing that you are thinking of the person is what makes it special," she said.

"I'm big on surprises," said Meakins, who likes to give his girlfriend notes or flowers when she's least expecting it. "It's really important to have surprises and stuff out of the ordinary."

Being spontaneous adds variety to the relationship. Step out of the comfortable routine of dinner and a movie, and leave the dull moments in the past.
