Baseball: Club team searches for solution

some sort of compromise.

"We obviously want to keep baseball alive on this campus," Caputo said. "We are the last thread of baseball on this campus."

Baseball was the first team sport recognized by the University. The first game was played in 1877, and the game has had a presence on campus since then. In 1981, funding for varsity baseball was cut by the Athletics Department. Club Sports absorbed the team and it became funded by student incidental fees and player dues.

The team has been a contender for national titles in recent years, including the National Club Baseball World Series last year.

"We went to nationals last year, and want to maintain that caliber of play," Caputo said.

Head coach Brad Ficek said the weather has impacted the quality of practices, which take place on the turf fields next to the Student Recreation Center. Because the team has no field and no indoor facilities, the team is at a double disadvantage, Ficek said.

Caputo said he isn't trying to start a war with anyone, he just wants to continue playing baseball at a high level.

"If we could work something out, it would be better than nothing," Caputo said.
