Bills: Scary movies, freaked-out friends among Bills' pleasures

could," Bills said. "By the end of the season, I was pretty worn out, but I don't think I showed it one day. That's something that helps my teammates out because if they don't see me showing it, then they push as hard as I do."

That determination and those results didn't go unnoticed by her teammates or coaches.

"They showed that they appreciated (my efforts) by nominating me," Bills said. "I was most valuable player of our team and I continue to get respect from each and every one of them day in and day out."

Bills also earned Honorable Mention honors from the Pacific-10 Conference last season and has picked up right where she left off, averaging more points per game, working with a better shooting percentage and blocking more shots.

Even now, Smith said Bills can revive the team when its on the verge of breaking down.

"She's what we need when the going gets tough and she can do what the team needs her to do to win. She has a 'team-first' mentality," Smith said. "She commands the ball offensively and we rely on her — she's a focus for us."

Opposing teams will testify that Bills is a focus for them as well.

"By being the second leading scorer on the team, coaches have to look at me and try to adjust," said Bills, who's faced a double-team or two in her day. She said she likes being a spotlight player of another team's advanced scouting report.

"Drea's a very intelligent basketball player," Smith said, adding that Bills is perfectly comfortable playing defense outside against a point guard if she has to. "She's a player that coaches dream about coaching. The intangibles that Drea does sometimes go unnoticed."

Bills comes across as a quiet person who just takes care of business, but Kraayeveld described her as caring and supportive.

"She's kind of quiet, but she's got a goofy side and a funny side," Kraayeveld said. "She definitely makes her presence known up on the court."

Off the court, Bills enjoys watching scary movies and watching her friends freak out.

"I think I'm a thrill-seeker," she said. "I would probably be the one that lives to the end and tries to save other people and make it to the end of the movie just because that's my personality."

And that's also how she operates on the court — unfazed and reliable.

Hopefully, the Ducks won't be frightened by the Arizona schools this weekend, when Bills and teammates Kraayeveld and Corrie Mizusawa will be recognized during Oregon's final homestand of the season. Bills will look to add to her 1,121 career points and 767 career rebounds and maybe take the first three-point field goal attempt of her career before the whistle blows one last time at Mac Court and she clocks out.

"A three-pointer — that would be nice," Bills said. "One for one."

Smith agrees — as long as it's well executed.

"She knows her strengths and plays to those every game," Smith said. "She has a very keen sense of right and wrong."
