Officer David Odum, who is part of the Major Collision Investigation team, works to file a comprehensive report on the accident at the Onyx Street and Franklin Boulevard intersection.

Accident: Police are trying to locate Adkins' family

Adkins, who lived on the sidewalk outside the University Bookstore.

Adkins had been a longtime resident of the area. University emeritus professor of English Edwin L. Coleman said he's known Adkins for at least 30 years; Ellis said he has known her for more than 20.

University Bookstore employee Lynda Hadeen said Adkins lived near the bookstore since April 2000 and before that lived on the bench in front of the Knight Library.

Initial investigations and witness interviews indicated that the driver of the vehicle, 59-year-old George James King of Alvadore, entered the intersection with a green light when the collision occurred, according to EPD. Adkins appears to have been traveling north across the intersection against the signal when she was hit by King's 1979 Chevrolet Malibu, according to EPD.

An EPD press release sent Tuesday evening stated the department did not expect to be able to notify Adkins' family of her death on Tuesday.

Ellis and Coleman said Adkins had a daughter, but Ellis said he has been unable to locate her.

"We had been trying to figure out where her kids were, and, you know, we get a lot of bits and pieces of information, but everything we looked into was a dead end," Ellis said, urging those with information about her to contact him. "Even if it's only a rumor (or) speculation, chances are I've heard the information already, but somebody might have something that I don't have, and that would help."
