Man faces felony charges for 'clandestine' videotapes

MEDFORD — A Rogue River man faces multiple felony charges after he allegedly videotaped visitors to his home, police said.

Stephen Gayle Calhoun, 52, was arraigned this week on 15 counts of encouraging child sexual abuse.

Calhoun was originally arrested April 8 on misdemeanor charges of invasion of personal privacy after at least one visitor to his home discovered hidden video cameras there, Jackson County Sheriff's Lt. Dewey Patten said.

Investigators served a search warrant at the home last weekend and are now reviewing seized tapes that were allegedly used to secretly record several people, including children, as they dressed or disrobed. Patten said the images could be considered "offensive" to those taped, but he did not provide further details.

"This is kind of unusual," Patten said. "We don't usually see this sort of clandestine videotaping in a home."

Inventor to receive Lemelson-MIT prize

PORTLAND — California inventor Elwood "Woody" Norris has been named to receive the $500,000 Lemelson-MIT prize this year to honor technology he developed to focus sound over long distances.

Norris, founder and chairman of American Technology Corp. in San Diego, holds 47 patents, including the invention of hypersonic sound technology.

The largest cash award for U.S. inventors will be presented for the first time in Portland in a ceremony Friday evening at the Oregon Museum of Science and Industry.

The Lemelson-MIT Prize Program at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology administers the award, which began after Jerome H. Lemelson, the holder of more than 550 patents, and his wife, Dorothy, established the Lemelson Foundation in the 1990s to fund programs that promote invention and entrepreneurship.

Medical license revocation rare despite mistakes

PORTLAND — The case of a Portland doctor under investigation for patient deaths in Australia after his medical practice was limited by Oregon regulators has raised questions about the level of disciplinary action for physician negligence and surgical mistakes.

Dr. Jayant M. Patel, 55, who worked for 12 years at Kaiser Permanente in Portland, is under investigation in Australia after problems at the Bundaberg Base Hospital in Queensland, where he was chief of surgery for the past two years.

The Oregon Board of Medical Examiners restricted his practice in 2000 following a review of 79 problem cases, including a man whose colostomy was performed backward, blocking his gastrointestinal system.

The board cited Patel for "gross or repeated acts of negligence" but based the restrictions mainly on four cases out of the 79 referred by Kaiser for review. Kaiser also alerted the National Practitioners Data Bank, a federal database that tracks disciplinary actions against doctors.
