

Alpha Omega: House residents share workload

"We all have house chores and kitchen duty every week. Kitchen duty is pretty self-explanatory: just clean up the kitchen and put away leftovers," Freeman said. "House chores differ by seniority, so mine is pretty easy. Basically, I just wipe down the counters in the kitchen. It takes like five minutes."

Their efforts are rewarded. In addition to providing residents with a large living space, the AO House also provides DSL, laundry facilities, a private parking lot, a pool table and a library of Christian resources. The bedrooms come fully furnished, making it easy to move in. The package costs $535 per month for the 2005-06 school year.

Residents receive two meals per day. Muir said the food is his one complaint with the house. He said it is often made en masse and isn't particularly healthy. For those who like variety or enjoy cooking, this can be a drawback.

"We eat as one big group, and there is usually a large quantity of whatever, but the food has been repetitive and bland this year," Freeman said.

Residents who are interested in living at the AO House need to complete an application that includes personal information, past religious involvement, a series of questions and personal testimony of involvement with Christ. Most tenants say this lengthy process was worth the time it took to complete.
