

ELECTRICITY fuels Kilowatt Klassic

ZACHARY BLANK | FREELANCE PHOTOGRAPHER

Left to right: Grant Larson, Nick Davis and Carl Larson prep car 12 before racing at EWEB's Kilowatt Klassic Sunday in the Valley River Center parking lot. The three are part of a team from Centennial High School in Gresham that raced and won first place last season. Centennial High School's electric car team returns this season to defend its title in the Northwest area of the Electrathon America electric car racing organization.

Russ Randolph and car 12 wait at the start line of EWEB's Kilowatt Klassic on Sunday. The object of the race is to see which car can complete the most laps in one hour without running out of battery power.

Grant Larson, left, and Nick Davis fix some minor problems with champion car 12's breaks and tire pressure. Because of Sunday's rain, all the racers had to drastically lower the pressure in their tires in order to get as much traction on the slippery track as they could.
