

Soccer: Midfielder receives academic award

the off-season for a sixth year of eligibility in light of her knee injuries that sidelined her for all of 2002 and 2004. Pending she be allowed to play in 2006, Garbin will return to a team that tripled last year's win total and put together the program's best non-conference record (8-1-1). Garbin has high expectations for Oregon next season and the parting seniors to thank for helping the Ducks to their second nine-win season in the program's history.

"We wouldn't be where we are without them," Garbin said. "I expect us to go farther than we did this year and to have a winning season."

The senior play of Garbin, Valadez, Katie Abrahamson and Cristian Higa was essential to Oregon's success this year, but more importantly, they provided leadership for Erickson's upcoming younger players such as Chatfield.

"I felt thankful all season to have them there," Chatfield said of her older teammates. "It was a pleasure playing with them."

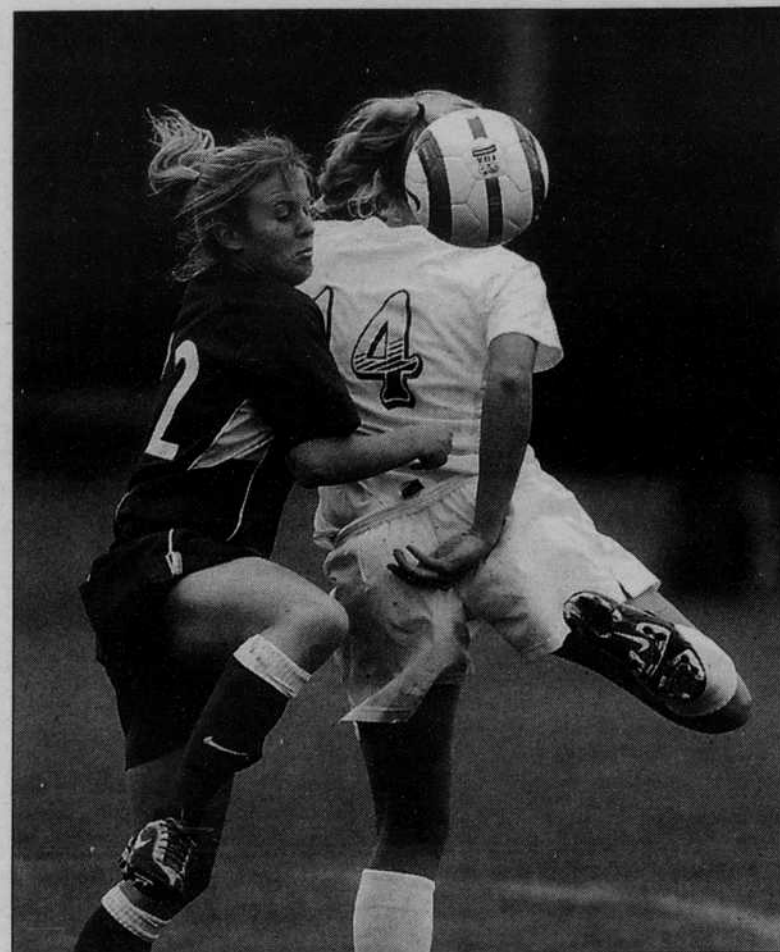

Chatfield had two saves in Sunday's game and played a significant role in improving the Ducks' defense that allowed a conference worst 2.33 goals per game in 2004. Chatfield already holds the school record for shutouts in a season with seven, and dropped her team's goals against average to 1.71 this past season. Erickson is proud of the defensive play she saw from Oregon and hopes they continue to improve heading into 2006.

"We learned that we have a good defense and goalkeeper," Erickson said. "We're still pretty young in our soccer mentality and in our understanding of the game. We still rely too much on our athleticism rather than strategy and moving the ball to build our attack, but those are things we can work on in spring."

After Sunday's loss, Erickson once again touched on how pleasing her team's unexpected success was for her and her staff.

"I know I've said this a lot lately, but I truly am surprised with how well we have done this year," Erickson said. On a positive note, senior midfielder Caitlin Gamble was named to the ESPN The Magazine Academic All-District-8 soccer first team. The senior was second on the Ducks in goals scored this season with four.
