

Lacrosse: Fall season allows for team growth

"We have time to fix all that," Kerwin said.

Oregon returned to its winning ways for the rest of the tournament, defeating the University of Nevada at Reno 13-3 and University of California Davis 5-3, while resting many regular starters in an effort to give everyone on the roster valuable game experience. Among the newer players expected to contribute this year are freshman attacker Clay Knope and sophomore defenseman Andrew Vincent.

"Fall ball is a time to get younger players experience that they might not get in the regular season," Cordova said.

The defeat at the hands of Sonoma State was the only blemish on Oregon's fall season, which included two in-state tournaments, one in Bend and one at home in Eugene, where the Ducks fielded split squads once again for the purpose of widening opportunities for playing time.

The club will now retreat indoors for the winter season for intrasquad scrimmages and weight training. Some team members are enrolled in conditioning classes at the Casanova Center to increase the Ducks' physical edge on the field.

"We were more athletic and faster (last weekend)," Kerwin said.

Oregon will have time to regroup after the holidays before the regular season begins against Stanford on Feb. 18.
