S. L. KLINE.

In the passing of S. L. Kline, Corvallis and Benton county lose a man of many virtues. That he had faults, his best friends will not deny, but that these were far outnumbered by his excellent traits will be conceded by all who knew him. He was a clean man morally, a first-class business man, public spirited within reason, a genial, sociable gentleman—a man who measured well with the average of mankind. In a business way he builded solidly, and more to the advantage of Corvallis than to himself. The business structure occupied by the Kline store is in keeping with the progress of the city and the equipment even slightly ahead. In this splendid building, his fine home, and in all material things acquired, S. L. Kline evinced a pride in the substantial, the lasting, rather than a love of tinsel, or gaudy show. His business operations extended beyond the confines of his store and it is said of him that he furnished Benton farmers their best market. If this he proved of inestimable value to Corvallis. In public position he served the public faithfully and ably, his service as a member of the Water Commission being highly commended by his associates. From every viewpoint, S. L. Kline was a man Corvallis can ill afford to spare. It is extremely sad that he should be called away just at the time when life probably looked brightest to him. Having made a success in a business way, he had been gradually shifting the burden of business responsibility to a son in whom he had every confidence. He felt that he had earned a rest and he intended to get more of the joy there is in life from closer companionship with his family and in the dissipation of some of his earnings in travel and indulgence of desires long crushed back by a business career marked by its tireless energy and close application. In apparent good health, with a delightful home, means to gratify every reasonable wish, the comradeship of his son, and the time to accept and enjoy such honors and pleasures as might come his way, S. L. Kline seemed a man to be envied, and but a few days ago most men would have been glad to have exchanged prospects with him. But Death stalked in, and the dream is ended—whether in greater glory no traveler hath yet returned to say. But those left behind, who dreamed the dream with him, are bowed in sorrow. Except for the suddenness of this enforced leave-taking, these suffer no keener anguish than comes to the humblest home when father, mother, sister or brother lie cold in death, but because of the business prominence of the deceased there is, necessarily, a more widespread interest. That that Power that gives and takes away may assuage the grief of this comrade boy, the bereft wife and other relatives is the sincere prayer of many, many friends of the deceased and his family.

Up to date, Cook has not made the mistake of speaking disparagingly of Peary. On the other hand, Peary has vexed more than a few of his friends by his insinuations in regard to Cook. It is not difficult to understand how a man like Cook, anticipating the early return of a victorious Peary, and knowing the difficulty of detection, might lay false claim to the honor he craves, and for a time at least enjoy all the glory that comes to a victor, but it is a little difficult to understand how a great discoverer, confident of his own ground and the falsity of his rival's claim, could so far forget himself as to believe it advisable to make his first words an attack on one scarcely worthy of his notice. Peary's evident anxiety to discredit Cook is a distinct credit mark in favor of the latter. That Peary actually reached the Pole none seem to doubt, and there is less doubt of Cook's success since Peary's early messages.

Astronomers say that Mars has water on it, but that planet as a residential place will not appeal to some people until astronomers can assure them that the Martians are familiar with 20th century methods of diluting their water.

NEWPORT CITIZENS AFTER THE C. & E.

A petition, it is reported, will shortly be circulated by the citizens of Newport asking the City Council to cancel the franchise given the Corvallis & Eastern Railroad in 1907, allowing it to put down a double track on Main street in Newport. This street follows the bay, and is the only

OPENING DAYS

The opening days at Mrs. J. Mason's millinery parlors, corner Monroe and Third streets, will be Friday and Saturday, September 17-18, when she will make a grand display of the most elegant line of pattern hats ever shown in Corvallis. These handsome creations in head dress are from the largest fashion centers in the east and are the latest and most prevailing modes. A becoming line of mourning hats, just received from New York, will also be shown. The ladies are cordially invited to call during these opening days and see the newest ideas in millinery.

According to agreement, the railroad was to have built into the city within a year, and it appears that the Corvallis & Eastern merely wanted to control the water front, a part of which was desired for a sawmill site by a large concern of which Mr. Stein, now a well-known business man in Portland, and formerly of Michigan, was the agent.

date methods of soil culture and locations best adapted for utilizing their knowledge. These presidents and directors are returning home to their thousands of students carrying the glad tidings of Oregon's fertility and possibilities. These conventions were secured through the unassisted effort of President Kerr, of our State Agricultural College and to him is due the gratitude of Oregon and Portland for our privilege to meet this body of men. President Kerr was elected president of the National Association during the convention. Oregon has reason to be very proud of her agricultural college and doubly so of its president. He is a man of magnetic presence, keen perceptibility and the best friend the youth of Oregon could have. We know he is appreciated by the student body of the college, as well as by men of national prominence with whom he is associated in his work, and the Pacific Northwest takes this opportunity of congratulating Oregon on its possession of Dr. Kerr as president of the State Agricultural College.

Care In Preparing Food.

In recent years scientists have proved that the value of food is measured largely by its purity; the result is the most stringent pure food laws that have ever been known. One food that has stood out prominently as a perfectly clean and pure food and which was as pure before the enactment of these laws as it could possibly be is Quaker Oats; conceded by the experts to be the ideal food for making strength of muscle and brain. The best and cheapest of all foods. The Quaker Oats Company is the only manufacturer of oatmeal that has satisfactorily solved the problem of removing the husks and black specks which are so annoying when other brands are eaten. If you are convenient to the store buy the regular size packages; if not near the store, buy the large size family packages.
