Diseased Beef Agitation

tion, and if he has that he should not be afraid to name his man, or to sign his own name to any communication.

Will Take Action.

Several of the most prominent business men have said that this matter MUST be brought to a focus. They demand that the butcher guilty of this crime be exposed, and promptly. If no such crime has been committed, then they expect the officials to discover the Wren man publishing that irresponsible article and make an example of him. Two or three say they spoke to Attorney Bryson about this matter, but that he laughed it off as unworthy of consideration. For this he is censured. Unfortunately he is now out of the city and immediate action can not be hoped for.

Butchers Should Act

It is just a little difficult to understand why the Corvallis butchers do not act in this matter. As it stands, ALL must rest under the suspicion of selling this diseased beef. The statement was that a Corvallis butcher was guilty, and as no name was mentioned all are open to suspicion. The guiltless ones should be ready to take prompt action to clear their own skirts, and if none is guilty then all should be glad to join in prosecution of the Wren irresponsible. As the matter stands now, no one has the assurance that he is not buying diseased meat.

The statement made in this office this morning by one of the most prominent merchants in this city was to the effect that this matter is going to be brought before the city council and county commissioners at once. Just what these bodies may be expected to do is a matter of conjecture, but the statement shows the state of some men's minds in regard to this matter. This merchant said that he had discussed the matter with other business men and they are determined to arouse somebody to action.

Are Bad Diseases

Since the above was written, the writer has made effort to find out the nature of "big head" in animals. A book on diseases of cattle failed to give that, but cattlemen present said "big head" is a common disease, one in which the beef's head swells to twice its normal size. It is regarded as very repulsive, and these animals are seldom ever sold locally. They are shipped to Portland and the other big cities. When in too bad shape they are killed and fed to hogs. "Lumpy jaw" (which the Wren writer may have meant) is a cancerous disease of the jaw that finally affects the entire system of the animal. Until the disease gets far along, some of the animals are killed and used for food, though the veterinaries do not recommend it. To the ordinarily sane person the idea of eating either big head or lumpy-jaw meat is enough to make him want to set fire to something.
