Isom Mitchell To Graduate From Highway Technology Next June

Scheduled to graduate from his highway technology course at O.T.I. next June is Edward Isom Mitchell, former local resident well-known in these parts. Isom enrolled in highway technology when it was first begun at O.T.I. in September, 1956, and feels that it is a course which has a lot of job possibilities. He explains that the course is sponsored by the Oregon State Highway Commission and that this year's graduates, about twelve in number, have standing job offers from the Commission. Isom also points out that employment opportunities will be greatly enhanced by the federal highway construction program which Congress passed in 1956 and which was also a factor in getting the course started at O.T.I.

Some of the subjects which Isom is taking are: surveying, drawing (including structural blueprint reading and estimating and advanced drawing of various types of maps), soil mechanics (including theory of properties of soils), concrete and asphalt, and hydraulics. Allied subjects include English composition, technical mathematics, physics, and technical report writing.

When Isom gets through these and other courses, he will receive an associate engineer's degree. He points out that with such a degree he could go on the job for the State as an engineer's aide I, a position carrying considerable opportunity for advancement. However, Isom believes right now that he'll seek employment with a private company, having received considerable experience at such work last summer when he was employed by Cunningham Construction Co. working on the Klamath Falls city sewage plant under the resident engineer.

While attending school Isom resides at O.T.I. with his wife, Lydia, and daughter, Elizabeth.
