When Soils Cease to Produce. The trouble with soils when they cease to produce as they did when new is not that the elements of plant food are actually exhausted from the soil, but the necessaary forces for the liberation are exhausted. One of these forces is bacteria. It is estimated that in the common soil there are 150,000,000 bacteria to the ounce.

These bacteria must have for their food, humus, then they will liberate within this square so as to inclose food for the growth of plants. To be a good farmer one needs to grow legumes and other cover crop plants to turn under for humus, and to encourage these beneficial bacteria to perform their functions in the soil.

> Fertilizing Apple Arees A Maine farmer orchardist had several apple trees along the stone wall. The trees were not considered of much value until the owner plowed the field for a crop, fertilizing it heavily and giving it liberal cultivation. The trees got their share of the benefit and produced apples least year worth $285. Another old neglected Baldwin tree was plowed and fertilized, and it resopnded with a crop of apples that sold for more than all the corn raised on the acre of ground where the trees stood.
