COMMON CABBAGE WORM DESTROYED
Control Measures Perfected Which Greatly Reduce Losses.

The common cabbage worm, the most destructive insect enemy of cabbage and related crops in the United States, begins its depredations as soon as the young plants are set out in the spring. Steps to combat it should be taken at an equally early date, therefore, it is pointed out in Farmers' Bulletin 766 of the United States department of agriculture, the "Common Cabbage Worm," by F. H. Chittenden.

Although the insect caused the total destruction of cabbage, cauliflower, and other crops in large areas in the years immediately after its first appearance in this country in the sixties, control measures have now been perfected to such a degree and adopted to such an extent that losses need not be great. Spraying with a solution of 2 pounds of powdered arsenate of lead, 4 pounds of arsenate of lead in the paste form, or 1 pound of Paris green to 50 gallons of water should be begun as soon as the plants are set out and should be repeated as often as examination of the plants shows it to be necessary.

The common cabbage "worm" is the larva of a white butterfly having black-tipped wings. The butterflies appear on warm spring days as early as March, even in the northern states, and continue about gardens and fields until after several severe fall frosts. In the gulf region they are present throughout the season. Eggs are laid on cabbage and related plants, where they hatch in from four to eight days.

The caterpillar is velvety green, about the color of the cabbage foliage. It eats voraciously and grows rapidly, becoming full grown in from 10 to 14 days after hatching. Three generations occur each season in the northeast and probably six in the extreme south. The first generation usually develops on wild plants.

Hand picking may be practiced successfully in small gardens. Where sprays are employed they should be applied in a fine mist, since coarser applications tend to gather in drops on the leaves and run off.

Community action in combating the cabbage worm is desirable wherever cabbage and related crops are grown extensively. Agreements can be entered into by the truckers of the community for each to spray throughout the season and to clean carefully the fields of the bulk of the old stalks as soon as they are harvested. A few stalks should be left at regular intervals as traps on which the last generation of female butterflies will deposit eggs. Such stalks should be poisoned freely with arsenicals so that the worms of the last generation will not develop.
