PEACH MEN START TO SAVE 1918 CROP

Should Spray for Blight as Soon as Crop is Harvested.

O. A. C. Experiment Station, Corvallis.—Successful peach growers of Oregon are starting now to save their 1918 crop. Much of this year's failure to get anything like a full crop, says H. P. Baras, plant pathologist at O. A. C., was due to the destruction of fruit buds the preceding fall and winter by peach blight. Blight is caused by the fungus that attacks the buds as soon as the fall rains begin and keeps it up throughout the entire winter unless prevented by proper spraying at the right time. The attack in the spring is usually extended from the buds and twigs to the fruit, sometimes seriously injuring even the foliage and new shoots.

This infection may be prevented by spraying with Bordeaux mixture, the first application to be made as soon as possible after the crop has been picked. This application is extremely thorough, care being taken to cover all the newly formed buds, though the foliage makes this difficult.

Another spraying is made in November to renew the coat of poison on the sprayed buds and to cover any buds missed in the first spray. A third spray applied in January or early February will protect the tree from late winter blight infection and also prove thoroughly effective against peach leaf curl.

To spread the Bordeaux, a rosin-soap sprayer is useful. Whale oil or fish oil soap, one pound to 50 gallons of spray, will also help. The best spreader so far found at the experiment station is distillate oil emulsion at the rate of one or two per cent of the Bordeaux.

Growers who have been spraying this way have had no trouble in keeping their trees in the best condition year after year. Failure to spray at the right time and in the right way has almost invariably resulted in rendering western Oregon peach orchards worthless within a few years.

Directions for preparing the Bordeaux and the rosin-soap spreader can be had free by writing to the Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, Oregon.

Forest Grove reports that the ten-mile unit of Gales Creek & Wilson River railway will be completed soon. The cost of this improvement was in the neighborhood of $200,000.
