Bob Harrison Busy on Aeroplanes

Bob Harrison writes to his brother, Dewey, as follows:

Dear "Duke:"

I received your letter dated June 15th and was very glad to get it. Well, Duke, I am certainly feeling fine and could not wish to feel better. Am working hard and in charge of an aeroplane which goes over the lines after the Boches, so have to work early and late, sometimes from four in the morning till nine at night with no extra pay for overtime, but I like the work so well I would not be satisfied unless I was working all the time.

We have moved twice since I last wrote you. We certainly have a fine lot of officers and flying officers. The lieutenant in charge of my plane is sure a fine fellow.

I wish you would write me a longer letter and write oftener and go into detail about everything and how and where all the folks are. Ask Uncle Percy why he doesn't write.

We are having fine weather here now and are making the best of it. Tell all my friends hello and say I would love to hear from them. Give my love to all the family and be sure to write soon.

Your loving brother,

BOB.

Brothers Build and Fly Airplanes

Two brothers of F. H. Taylor, who lives near Houlton, are in the U. S. service in the aviation corps. One of them, Clarance, is a skilled machinist and is in an airplane assembly plant in England. The other, M. M. Taylor, is an aviator and is in active service in France, so it might happen that the machinist brother will put together the airplane for his flying brother to wing a Hun. Stranger things have happened. Both of the young men enlisted at Hood River where the Taylor family live.

E. H. Scott, local manager of the phone company, received a letter from his brother, J. M. Scott, first lieutenant in the British army, stating that he had been wounded quite severely in the recent campaign in Palestine, but was getting along all right. The lieutenant stated that his men had to charge the Turks across a barren plain and without the support of the artillery and hand to hand and bayonet fighting ensued. The Turks fought well, but the Tommies overcame them and captured the position. Lieutenant Scott has been in the British army for several years and is a veteran of the Saloniki campaign.

Word has been received that George Nonas, a Greek boy who left St. Helens some months ago with one of the draft contingents, has been seriously wounded in action on the French battlefields. George, before his entry into the army, was employed at the mill and has lived in St. Helens for a number of years. He was a quiet, hardworking fellow and owned his own home here.

Frank Wilkins received a telegram Wednesday afternoon, stating that his son, Justin, had been wounded in action, degree undetermined. No further information has been received and it is hoped that Justin sustained only slight injuries. He enlisted in the engineering corps the first of last May and was sent overseas June 29th.

Mrs. J. T. Taber has received a letter from her husband telling her of his safe arrival at Fort Myer, Virginia. It is probable that his company of engineers will be kept there only a short while before being sent overseas.
