

FARM NOTES

Sulfur is Money-Maker

An increase of 3000 tons of alfalfa in Deschutes county resulted from the application of ten carloads—300 tons—of sulfur last winter. This big shipment of sulfur by the farm bureau hung up a world record for agricultural use. The value of the increase was $60,000 at present alfalfa prices. Estimates place sulfur shipments next winter at 12 cars. They will be applied to lands not treated last winter, on which results will last for three years. Two-thirds of the 12,000 acres of alfalfa in Deschutes county will then have been brought into the preferred class by applications of sulfur.

Dodder Pest on Alfalfa

Doddered alfalfa belongs to the west, says Miss Agnes Ryder, seed analyst and tester of the federal and O. A. C. seed testing laboratory at Corvallis. For more than a year before coming to Oregon Miss Ryder worked in the Washington, D. C., office where she handled much eastern and mid western seed that was free from dodder. She finds a good deal of it in Oregon and the other northwestern states served by the Corvallis branch and thinks considerable pains might well be taken to eliminate it. She will test samples sent by farmers free, both for purity and germination.
