When fire, flood or tornado strikes some town of ours the cry is "Send for the Red Cross!" If terrible pestilence brings death and horror the same plea goes forth. It is always answered. The Red Cross is too loyal to feel fear. Its symbol is, literally, the red badge of courage.

During the year ending June 30, 1920, the Red Cross carried aid to 150 communities, in 27 states, where disaster had taken toll. The dead numbered 850, the injured 1500, the homeless 15,000. And the Red Cross was first to come and last to leave.

"Human courage should rise . . ." Join the Red Cross or renew your membership by clipping this advertisement, filling out the blank and mailing it—today.
