

...had his truck load of ... on the dock and was unloading, when the crank of the derrick slipped, striking him on the head, rendering him unconscious. Being alone, he lay there until he regained consciousness then walked home, had his wounds dressed and rested awhile. His father accompanied him back to the dock. They unloaded the truck and got it back to Robinsky's in time for the morning run.

Mr. Edwards, a French-Canadian ex-service man, working with the telephone company, fell backward from a pole he was working on and was seriously hurt. He was taken to the Maine hotel, and afterward to the hospital. Some one picked up his climbing outfit. Please leave them at the Maine hotel, and relieve his anxiety, as they are worth about $30.
