ATTACKING THE TAXES.

Out of the series of meetings being conducted by the state tax investigating committee may come lower taxes

The members of the committee ascertaining the conditions over the state. Testimony as to the burden-some efforts of the burdensome effects of the high taxes has been plentiful, causes have been freely described and there has been the husband of this California school no lack of suggestions and recom-Mendations as to remedies. Of all the solutions put forward that which has seemingly been the most persistent and which gives most promise of the relief sought is a graduated income tax. At prac-tically all of the meetings there have been earnest advocates of this form been earnest advocates of this form of taxation and certain members of the commission have shown a de-

It is a well country largely escape. known fact that many persons of substantial income have their property in a form which makes it easily hidden from the assessor. The result has been that a large amount of personal property yields no state or municipal taxes, placing an inequitable load upon real property and other roperty that cannot be concealed. The single tax is almost an recombined fact under the present. The Mist has always been in the accomlished fact under the present system, as witness the numerous cases wherein farms are taxed for amounts in excess of their rental value.

FINISH THE JOB.

to designate no other county roads be valuable and should open the as market roads until the St. Hel-ens-Pittsburg market road is completed is, in our opinion, the wise course to pursue. Some counties in Oregon have made the mistake of designating too many roads as market roads with the consequence that none of the roads are completed and several roads has been of little benefit to the people. It is likely that the St. Helens-Pittsburg road work will be completed this year, or so nearly completed that it will take comparatively small sum to finish the job next year. The court can then designate some other necessary road as a market road and stay with that job until it is finished. It seems the part of wisdom to finish one be fore starting another one especially in this county where there is a com-paratively small sum to expend or market roads and where road build ing, on account of the topography of the country is very expensive.

NOTHING LIKE VERSAILLES TREATY.

Conditions in the United States senate are quite different today from what they were when President Wilson recommended the ratification b that body of the Versailles treaty That document had been formulate without the advice of the senate and without the approval of its terms b the leader or representative of eith-er political party in the senate. Then, as now, it was quite generally regarded as a serious tactical blun-der on the part of Mr. Wilson that he did not seek the advice, in the early stages of the peace deliberations, of some of the leaders of his own party in the senate and of those of the opposition whose support was essential to the success of the great undertaking upon which he had de-cided to enter. Now, with the ratification of the pending treaties sought by the administration, it is pointed out that those documents are sponsored by the leaders of both the major political parties in the senate.
