

JUDGE LOGAN TELLS HOW HE FOUND THE LOGANBERRY

(From Salem Journal.)

A large crowd of banqueters last night heard Judge Logan of Oakland, California, originator of the loganberry, make an address on "The Loganberry" in the Christian church restaurant at the state fair grounds.

The judge's speech, in part, was as follows:

"I planted Texas early, a domestic blackberry that blooms at the same time as the wild blackberry in one row, and the wild blackberry in the second row, to produce a new blackberry superior to any cultivated sort, with the flavor of the wild berry. By chance, and with no thought of getting a cross between the blackberry and raspberry, I planted the third row to an old form of the raspberry known as the red Antwerp."

"The plants, Texas early, I had set out fruited the next spring, 1889, in a limited way from the old wood. The fruit ripened in May, when the seed was planted. By early fall I had about three hundred vigorous plants for field setting. (These proved entirely different from any known blackberry and was later named the Mammoth, because of the large size of the cane and berry and yield. This was the original purpose of the breeding, the byproduct of which proved the greater of the two, as explained by Judge Logan.)"

"In the very first row I found a single lonely plant entirely different from the new blackberry, and in appearance unlike any berry I have ever seen. The color and appearance of the cane was something like the raspberry, but it was neither a blackberry or raspberry."

"It was a new form of the rubus family. I tended this little plant tenderly and in due time when it came to fruiting in the spring of 1882, I found that the red Antwerp raspberry I had planted had crossed with the Texas early blackberries, and that nature had produced a new and perfect fruit, later named the loganberry."

"In the ensuing 49 years the loganberry has remained absolutely the same, never reverting to either parent type but keeping its identity."

"After the loganberry became a distinct and popular fruit of commercial value, the demand for plants led unscrupulous dealers finding the plant reproducing true to seed gathered and offered great quantities of seed for sale all over the United States. The fruit of course was worthless and of no greater value than if a fakir sold you a seedling as Bellflower apple, but in this entire lot of worthless seedlings not one showed any tendency to revert. This transaction did the loganberry industry an immense amount of harm."

"The loganberry is not only a distinct species of the rubus, but it is the only successful attempt ever made to cross the raspberry with the blackberry that has stood the test of time and is in existence today."

"I have made extensive research of this berry's history and have been unable to find a single plant that varies in the slightest degree from the loganberry. I have never seen a particle of difference in diastetic value, and never a single berry that was not identical in size, color and flavor with the loganberry."

FARM POINTERS OF FARM VALUE

Spray Peaches Early.

Peaches should be fall sprayed with Bordeaux 4-4-50. The earlier the better. The rains bring favorable conditions for blight and die-back infections. Get ahead of them.

Remove Diseased Potatoes.

Potato fields intended for certification should have all diseased hills removed before digging the crop. All damaged rough, mis-shapen potatoes should be sorted out at digging time.

How to Select Seed Corn.

Select seed corn from stalks having one good ear. Take no ears from fallen or down stalks which are often diseased. Avoid selections from thin places in the field. Save seed now and dry it promptly.

Early Dry Plowing Suggested.

Fall work is facilitated by early dry plowing on most soils. Dry plowing is easily done on irrigated ground. Ground that has been in cultivated crops will generally plow well before the rains. Spring grain stubble is more easily dry plowed than winter grain stubble land which has not been worked for a year. Thorough discing in the fall makes early plowing easier by loosening the surface, working in stubble and refuse, and helping to trap early fall showers, thus softening the land and lessening the power required.

In 1921 the Western Electric company, the manufacturing organization of the Bell System, turned out nearly 500,000 telephones. This is almost twice the entire number of telephones in the whole of France, and, excluding Canada, Germany and Great Britain, more than the combined number in any two countries in the world. The greater part of the 500,000 telephones were used in the United States.

Slip a few strong rubber bands into the shopping bag before leaving home. They will prove a great convenience, when several small parcels can be made into one with the aid of the elastics.

If dishes can not be washed immediately after using them, pour a little boiling water over them, and when you are ready to wash them the task will be much easier.
