

ROAD BUILDING
PROGRAM AHEAD

Fifteen to twenty years of building good roads lie ahead of the United States. Under the program which the country has adopted there will be built during that time, 180,000 miles of improved highways which will constitute the federal-aid highway system and an equal or greater mileage of state and local roads. When the great job is done, the transportation facilities of the country will far exceed those of any other nation, past or present, in the world. The highways of the ancient Romans, whose fame has come down through the centuries, will pale by comparison.

Details of this vast road-building program are to be placed before the highway education board at its conference in Washington, October 28 to 29, inclusive, by state highway engineers and officials of the bureau of public roads, United States department of agriculture, to whom has been entrusted the work of planning and supervising the construction of federal-aid highways. The plan will be presented to enable the board to proceed authoritatively with its work of devising aid for schools and colleges to which road-builders of the country are turning for competent highway engineers.

Officials of the bureau place the aggregate cost of the federal aid program alone at about $3,000,000,000, spread over the twenty year period. They base this estimate on an average cost of $17,000 per mile. The average cost, in turn, takes into consideration all classes of improved roadways from the cheapest to the most expensive types. Approximately one-third of the proposed system, or 60,000 miles of improved highways, already are either built or building.

The program is a new one. Up to comparatively recent years, road building in the United States had been conducted without special regard to a national system. Highways had been constructed where needed without considering whether they would link up in the most effective manner with the whole network of roads to be spread over the nation. Engineers had sought more to meet immediate and local demands than the broader requirements of the states and nation.

The recent federal aid road building program, officials of the bureau state, will contemplate the construction of only such roads as fit into the national program and contribute to the national system. At the same time the roads will be so selected as to serve the most important local requirements. With marked modifications, the system adopted in the building of the railways of the country will be borne in mind in the construction of the country's new highways. There will be main lines of highway communication between centers and thousands of miles of feeder roads, reaching back into the more sparsely settled regions and into the rich agricultural sections, to tap areas whose population and products will flow over the new system.

New roads will be planned and built—thousands of miles of them—where they will fit in most advantageously with the entire program. The bureau is continuing its research work into most efficient methods of road building, including the character and wearing power of materials, resisting qualities of varying subsoils, etc., and has amassed a considerable store of valuable information all of which will be available for the highway engineer of tomorrow, whom the board is seeking to have educated in practical and modern methods.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

A glass of bluish tinge placed over a faded photograph will bring out the picture more clearly.

Grapefruit seeds planted in a fern pan will grow into a pretty bit of greenery for the table center.

Pictures are kept from becoming crooked on the wall by merely twisting the wire once or twice around the hooks.

Fruit stains on linen should be smeared with glycerine and left for about an hour, then wash the stains in warm soapy water; repeat the process if necessary.
