"TIMOTHY'S QUEST" A DELIGHTFUL PICTURE

What is said to be the dearest, sweetest story ever told is Kate Douglas Wiggin's "Timothy's Quest" the pictureization of which comes to The Liberty next Sunday and Monday as a first-run attraction. This film has created a sensation in the east, and has just arrived in this territory. None of the city play-houses has as yet given it a showing, according to Manager Cates.

"Timothy's Quest" has much to distinguish it from all other stories of the heart because of the unusual conditions under which it was made as well as the unusual material contained in it. Kate Douglas Wiggin is America's best-loved author of stories about children. Her "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," both as book and motion picture, achieved wider success than any other story of its kind. "Timothy's Quest", her favorite work, was chosen for production by a group of Maine capitalists, whose ideal is to present stories by Maine authors about Maine characters as they really are. All the geographic locations in the book are scrupulously preserved in the picture; every character is precisely as created by the author; every detail throughout the production is a reflection of her taste and desire. This rare condition was brought about by producing "Timothy's Quest" in sight of her home.

As for the story itself, it throbs with interest and blends tears with smiles. Seldom, if ever, has there been a story of like whimsicality, wholesomeness, sudden surprise and tender delineation of human nature. And the leading roles are essayed by two amazing children—Joseph Dewey, aged 10, and Helen Rowland, aged 3. "Timothy's Quest" more than a children's story, is a story for any and everybody who happens to have a heart. The cast is large and all-star.
