have to do with patenta. Last Friday, at Portland, one of the Metropolitan electric cars on the Fulton Park division jumped off one of the high trestles on that line down into the gulch below, a distance of about thirty feet, seriously injuring a number of people who were on the car. The cause is substantially that the car was traveling at too high a rate of speed for the short curves in the track. The case seems to be one of rank carelessness on the part of the motorman. It is claimed by some that he had a companion on the front platform with him, and that the two were carrying on a flirtation with a couple of young lady passengers on board the car. This, of course, diverted the motorman's attention from his business, hence the accident. Mr. George A. Steel, president of the company, when questioned about the matter, as all corporation men do, said "Accidents will happen, you know, and as far as I can find out there was an obstruction on the track. The motorman is one of the most careful men I have, (this is always the case when an accident happens), and he says he saw some leaves lying across the track. He avers that they were not going over three miles an hour. (Listen!) but I doubt that there was that much speed, as I am told that the car was barely moving." Mr. Steel, of course, knows better than to tell this kind of a story. None of the electric cars run at a less rate than seven or eight miles an hour, and in the outunfortunate victims who were on the men. Success to them.
