Royal Baking Powder

Strongest, Purest, Most Economical.

As to whether any of the baking powders are equal to the "Royal," the official tests clearly determine. When samples of various baking powders were purchased from the grocers, and analyzed by the United States Government Chemists and the Chemists of State and City Boards of Health, the reports revealed the fact that the "Royal" contained from 28 per cent to 60 per cent. more leavening strength than the others, and also that it was more perfectly combined, absolutely pure, and altogether wholesome.

As most of these powders are sold to consumers at the same price as the "Royal," by the use of the Royal Baking Powder there is an average saving of over one third, besides the advantage of assured purity and wholesomeness of food, and of bread, biscuit and cake made perfectly light, sweet, and palatable.

The official reports also reveal the presence, in other powders, of alum, lime or sulphuric acid, by which their use is made a matter of grave danger to the consumer.

Whenever a baking powder is sold at a lower price than the "Royal," or with a gift, it is a certain indication that it is made from alum, and is to be avoided under all circumstances.

A Life Search.

Men in the ministry are brought into contact with cranks of all sorts. Their name is legion, and the subject of religion, which appeals strongly to the imagination and gives full scope to speculation, has a special fascination for them. If preachers would write out their experiences with this class of persons there would be no scarcity of spicy reading. It was a harmless kind of crank that Bishop Thomas Bowman, of this city, ran against one time at a camp meeting. On that occasion he preached from the following text: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the son of man be lifted up." The most attentive listener in the congregation was a tall, lank individual, with wild, deep set eyes and long hair. At the conclusion of the sermon he made a bee line for the bishop, and the latter, divining the character of the man, tried to get away from him, but failed.

"Well, now, my brother," said the bishop, with just a little pig in his voice, for he was very tired and the weather was hot, "what is it you wish?" "Bishop," he replied, with intense earnestness, "I have been a student of the Bible all my life, and there is one question that has troubled me for a long time. Perhaps you can throw some light on it. It is this: What was the color of the snakes that were sent to afflict the children of Israel?"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE CHILDREN'S SUNDAY NIGHT.

On Sunday, as the daylight dies,
And the distant chapel bell
Re-echoes to the sunset skies,
O'er the dreams we love so well;
Our thoughts go back long years ago,
And our children's faces softly glow,
As in the Sunday twilight dim
They sing together some sweet hymn.

On Sunday, as the sunlight fled
And the twilight mists arose,
When skies were pale and overhead
The children of our house would raise
Their voices in a hymn of praise:
And as I dream I seem to hear
The echoes swelling sweet and clear.

We used to sing—'with the rest—
Till the daylight seemed away,
Each had the hymn he loved the best,
And we knew them all today;
And when we hear the church bells chime,
There lives that fair old Sunday time,
Of long ago come back again.
—Flavel Scott Mimes in New York Ledger.

Head and Hair of Infants.

The heads of infants should not be washed in brandy, whisky, spirits of hartshorn or other stimulating washes. They do no good, cause pain, and may so irritate the tender scalp as to cause disease.

For cleansing the head, soap and water, or water with a little borax in it, are all strongly preferred at their time of life. Thus managed, the hair will be smooth and glossy, and accumulations on the scalp will be prevented.

The custom of putting caps on infants having been abolished by all well informed people, it is hardly necessary to say that the practice should be abandoned by all, as the head is warm enough without the cap, is very likely to be too warm with it, and in this way causing the brain affections to which children are so prone.—Hall's Journal of Health.

The Life for a Singer.

"What is the best food for a singer?" is a question very often asked of me, and of all professional singers. I reply, "Good, plain, but nourishing food; for this is the best for health, and to well in health is to be well in voice, and good health is absolutely necessary for good singing. Some few things should be entirely avoided, such as nuts, for instance, which affect the throat as well as the digestion. To lead a regular life is also absolutely essential, and young—and indeed all—artists, if they wish to excel, must live for their art alone, and must give up a great many 'pleasures' but if this, as should be done, the artist to become great, then they will have their reward for all sacrifices.

To be artists they should live as artists—go whenever possible to hear and to see fine singing and fine acting; endeavor to see fine pictures, fine statues; read clever biographies and the biographies of great men and great historical characters; to live, in fact, in an atmosphere of art and of intellect, which will help them far more than at first they may be disposed to think in their own artistic career.—Mrs. Albani-Gye in Ladies' Home Journal.

An Automatic Paper Sealer.

An automatic machine, which forms, fills, weighs and seals packages, is being introduced into houses where large quantities of fine cut tobacco, soda, starch, etc., are put up.

The operations of the machine are curious and novel in every particular, and the machine is so simple that a child of a series of forming blocks, receptacles, folders, gummers and feeders, all working in harmony, so that the packages are being smoothly and continuously produced. The forming blocks successively size the paper, which instantly afterward is wrapped around them, folded and gummed at the end. The paper sacks are then plunged into receptacles, filled, folded on top and sealed. The manifest saving in labor thus effected would seem to warrant the claim of the inventor that if the machine is worked to its full capacity it will pay for itself in 273 working days.—New York Telegram.

Belasco's Early Plays.

David Belasco, the playwright, says: "In my early days I used to be indefatigable in bringing plays of mine to managers. One manager I suspected of never reading any plays, so I brought him on mine. One day I gave him a roll of blank paper tied with red ribbon. He received the roll politely, and told me to call in two weeks. I called, as he had requested, and he said he had read the play, but that unfortunately he would not do it. Then I slowly unrolled the blank paper before his eyes, held it up to him and enjoyed the comedy situation."—New York Herald.

A Gigantic Skull with Eighty Teeth.

Furman, the Scotch giant of the time of Eugene II, measured but two lines less than any other man. Chevalier Scovry, in his account of the voyage to the peaks of Tennessee, says that in opening one of the sepulchral caverns they found a human skull which measured four feet in circumference, and which was provided with eighty teeth.

TALKS WITH A BRUSH

AN ECCENTRIC OLD EVANGELIST OF WESTCHESTER, N. Y.

Winter and Summer He Wanders Along the Roads Painting Scripture Texts on Bowlders—Nothing Deters Him—Fascinate When Violence is Used.

Who is the mysterious little brush evangelist of Westchester county? Up and down the beautiful hills and along the rugged, rocky roads of Westchester for mile after mile his work can be seen. The wayfarer cannot escape it. At every fresh turn in the road the painted words of warning confront him. Even the most ungodly sinner in all New York, after walking a mile from the little village of White Plains, would think he was surely on the rocky road to the New Jerusalem.

Up in Westchester they call the mysterious evangelist the "Scripture Slinger," and they say "he slings it powerful thick." So he does, and with discrimination rare, in mixed in oil.

All along those rocky roads the fences are made of huge bowlders, out of which rough walls are made, separating the pastures and bounding the roadsides. Besides there are still other bowlders jutting out of the soil along the roadway. On these, and on the stone fences, the mysterious evangelist unfolds his warnings. He is a little man, but energetic. He is a silent man, except with his brush, made out of hairs plucked from the necks of oxen. With it he speaks. His only name is "George."

He marches, a Salvation Army of one man, carrying a bugle to announce his coming. His sandy mustache bristles, and the lines of his face show sixty years. There hangs upon his head an old straw hat, summer and winter, and on the hat is a broad ribbon, bearing the legend, "Jesus is mighty to save." A cane, carved with innumerable inscriptions, helps him over the hills as he marches on, carrying the battered handbag in which repose his restless brush, his pot of paint, his Bible and other little things, such as a comb and cake of soap, through the use of which he keeps himself only a seminomad. They say there is no vanity in him, nor any glass with a quicksilver back in that battered bag.

As he marches he spies a rock, big and brown, half hidden behind a clump of weeds, and on which he left no message when last along that way. In a moment the weeds are uprooted, and kneeling by the rock he paints, letter by letter, "O-b-y-t-h-e-L-o-r-d." Then he marches on reading the Bible. On a smooth worn bowlder in the stone fence, he prints, "Repent! Believe! And sin no more." Across the road he leaves the warning, "You must repent or go to hell." A little farther on he kneels again, and under his brush grow the words, "The wages for sinners is hell-fire."

There are painted words, though along the roads more worldly than the ones he leaves there. One of them says, "Spend your Sundays at Manhattan beach." On finding this it is said he bowed his head a moment. Then in a deeper shade of blue than usual, mixed on the spot, he painted right alongside the words, "Where will you spend eternity?"

Many of the farmers up in Westchester take summer boarders, and on a big tree in the front yard each of them nails up a sign which reads: "Pleasant summer home. Board by the day or week." Across the road from such as these the paint brush says, "Think of that beautiful home above."

So the strange evangelist goes on, fighting the world with blue paint, measure for measure, and covering the surplus space with admonition, exhortation and advice.

To him all things are of the world worldly, and therefore he knows naught of politics.

This strange man sleeps by the roadside, in a stable or where he may, and for months eats only what is given him. Money is nothing to him. For a little while each year he works on the Sound View stock farm, owned by William A. Sammis, and it is then he pulls the hair from the necks of oxen and makes his stock of brushes. His paint is given him and he mixes it himself.

He has been told to stop the task of covering the rocks of Westchester with blue paint, but he keeps on. By his action he says, "Shall a man not make his fellow man reflect?"

Township trustees threaten and resolve in vain. The mottoes multiply. Assaults do not terrify him. Once he was met by two men near the Westchester fair grounds and commanded to stop painting a sentence he had begun. He turned his back to them and kept on without reply. When he had finished he began a new sentence. Then the men rushed at him and struck him down senseless with clubs. The unfinished sentence read: "Forgive thine"—

A Dining Room Motto.

In the dining room of a quaint old house seen lately was the inscription over the fireplace in flowing illuminated text:

Work the jaws.
A silent pause.
Frequent hawhaws.

This was an exceedingly apt reminder of the value of slow eating and cheerfulness at table.—West Chester News.

The Lady Trapped.

"Yes," said the society lady at a swell affair the other evening, "I've crossed the Atlantic ocean eleven times." The smart young man adjusted his eyeglasses and said, "Ahi! Born in America, I suppose?"

"No, indeed! Why do you ask?"

"Because if you were born in this country and had crossed the ocean eleven times you'd be on the other side now, don'tcherknow?"

The lady figured a moment on the tips of her pretty fingers, blushed violently and fled.—London Tit-Bits.

Window Curtain Sales Decreasing.

A clerk in one of the New York dry goods stores says that the demand for rich curtains for windows has fallen off of late because so many wealthy families have gone in for the craze of having coats-of-arms and other heraldic devices worked in on the hangings of their windows. Some two or three small shops on Fifth avenue introduced the hobby, and have done a fairly large business. These particular firms supply draperies different from those in stock in most of the dry goods and upholsterers' places, and the decrease in sales in the latter stores is noticeable.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Queen Victoria has declared her intention of devoting the entire women's jubilee offering to the English Association of Trained Nurses, the chief object of which is the improvement of the nursing of the sick poor.

Death has recently separated a couple at Moore, Cheshire, who have been married for sixty-three years. They were Mr. and Mrs. Banner, the husband being 90 years of age and his wife, who has just died, 83. They had lived at Moore all their lives, and in one house for more than half a century.

DAUGHTERS OF THE KING.

Practical Work That the Order Is Doing in the Poor Districts of New York.

The gracious services of the great Order of King's Daughters has become so important in purpose and diversified in interest that it has of necessity been organized, systematized and classified under various committees, each devoted to the alleviation of some particular form of distress. No branch of its beneficence is more practical in aim and devoted in administration than that which has its headquarters in the Mariners' temple, at No. 1 Henry street, and is bending its energies to the relief of all forms of suffering in tenement houses.

The tenement house committee was organized last spring with Mrs. James F. Ruggles as their president, and the little band of women wearing the silver cross and purple ribbon went about among the poor of the Fourth ward and along the sides tenements simply distributing flowers where flowers were rarely seen, and thus gaining admittance to the homes of the poor. When the hot days of July came the King's Daughters had become friends of the families, and found more important work to do than the scattering of blossoms and kind words among them. Sickness, hunger and death, with all their attending distresses, were among the people, and the committee hastily surveyed the field and evolved their system of relief, working always in co-operation with the charity organization to avoid impostors.

Every summer the board of health sends into the tenement district a corps of fifty doctors to attend the sick poor gratuitously during the months of July and August. In previous years the doctors have found their work almost useless, owing to the lack of proper food, proper nursing and comfortable surroundings on the part of patients. Last year each physician carried with him a bundle of postal cards stamped with a purple cross and addressed to the headquarters of the King's Daughters' mission. Each case of distress, with its peculiar needs, was described upon a card, and at the close of the day's work was forwarded to the address given. The doctor also left written directions at the house of each patient as to the treatment and diet, directions which only a trained nurse could comprehend and carry out.

But there was one trained nurse at first, and afterward there were two who followed after the doctor to care for the sick and save the dying. The nurses were King's Daughters, too, and because of the silver cross they wore gave their services to the society for the small amount which it actually cost them for board all through the heated term, when they might have been earning $20 or $35 a week at much easier work. They made from sixty to seventy visits a week from house to house. If they found a patient destitute, as they frequently did, without even sheets upon the bed, they hurried back to the mission and procured them where the circles of King's Daughters had prepared them. If they needed the nourishing food required by the sick, that, too, was found at the mission provided by the diet kitchens and the King's Daughters.

Medicine or necessities of immediate need they were authorized to procure at the nearest shop at the expense, always, of the King's Daughters. The distress that confronted the committee was from the first heartrending, the perplexities overwhelming. The order to the nurses was always to supply immediate need; later the case was investigated, and if deserving the kindly help was extended until it was no longer required.

Like many great projects, this has but a small beginning. Three women at first, afterward seven, united in a circle of King's Daughters, with this purpose in view. The circle has increased to twenty members, with Mrs. E. T. Gillespie as president. The first $1,000 toward the building of the house has been secured, and work is constantly going on toward raising the desired amount.

A coal club has been established by one of the members, who buys coal in quantities and gives the people orders by which small amounts may be delivered at the same price. Two of the members buy tea in large packages, and kindly spend the time to weigh it out themselves to sell in small amounts. Rooms have been rented also and sublet to needy and deserving people, and kindly help is given wherever it is possible, both in the line of personal ministrations and practical charity.—New York Sun.

An Entertaining Widow.

"I have," says a Maine pension agent, "what I consider a funny pension case on hand. Several years ago I secured a pension for a soldier of a certain regiment and company, and then, after his death, I secured a pension for his widow. Now she comes to me to help her secure another pension as the widow of another member of the same regiment. You see that since I secured her first widow's pension she had married a comrade in arms of her first husband, and now that he, too, is dead, with a frugality and economy that are commendable and according to Scripture, she is applying for the second pension. I have never known exactly a similar case."—Leviston Journal.

IF I WERE FAIR.

If I were fair:
If I had little hands and slender feet
If to my cheeks the color rich and sweet
Came at a word and faded at a frown
If I had clinging curls of burnished brown
If I had dreamy eyes aglow with smiles,
And graceful limbs and pretty girlish wiles—
If I were fair, Love would not turn aside,
Life's path, so narrow, would be broad and wide.

If I were fair:
Perhaps like other maidens might I find
A true heart's store of tried and tested gold,
Love waits on Beauty, though sweet Love alone
It seems to me, for naught might I have found
But Beauty's charm is strong, and Love obeys
The mystic witchery of her wily ways.
If I were fair my eyes would seem so few,
Life would unfold sweet pictures to my view,
If I were fair!

If I were fair:
Perhaps the hair, with cream of Jor,
To clear my neck would throw away its tress,
And hide its dimples in my shining hair,
Bewildered by the mass of glory there,
But now—Oh, shadow of a young girl's face!
Uncolored lips that Fate's cold finger trace!
You will not blame the child whose we have hands
Close,
Not on the blighted bud, but on the rose
So rich and fair.

If I were fair:
Oh, just a little while, some soft touch
Oh my face to glory might I touch
If no one about my presence or my kiss,
My heart would almost break beneath its bliss.

'Tis said each pilgrim shall attain his goal,
And perfect light shall flood each blinded soul,
When day's flush merges into sunset's bars,
And night is here, and then beyond the stars
I shall be fair.

—Edith Rutter in London Spectator
Pure Food in Congress.

The act of Congress authorizing the examination of the baking powders has resulted in a most unprecedented compliment to the Royal Baking Powder.

The tests were made in the government laboratory at Washington, and the official report shows that the Royal is superior to all others in leavening strength—being over 90 per cent. above the average. The report also shows the purity of the Royal Powder and the wholesomeness of its ingredients.

This is probably the highest compliment of an official character ever paid to a proprietary article, although no more than the great array of baking powder consumers would expect in behalf of their old friend and favorite.

The result of the official examination, as thus determined, will, of course, make the "Royal" the standard for government purchases.

The onion has a virtue to which thousands of people will attest. This is its ability to ward off attacks of malaria in any form, and to cure cases as rapidly as the strongest doses of quinine.

There are times when men have to be treated like children, when they are very ill, for instance, or when they are in imminent danger which must be averted first and explained afterwards.

There are not a few who think themselves lucky if at the dinner hour they are able to ally the cruel pangs of hunger with a philosophic pipe.

IMITATORS AND IMPOSTORS.

The unequal success of ALCOCK'S PAIN-RELEASING PLASTER as an external remedy has induced unscrupulous parties to offer imitations, which they endeavor to sell on the reputation of ALCOCK'S. It is an absurdity to speak of them in the same category as the genuine porous plaster. Their pretensions are unfounded, their vaunted merit unsupported by facts, their alleged superiority to or equality with ALCOCK'S a false promise.

The ablest medical practitioners and chemists and thousands of grateful patients unite in declaring ALCOCK'S PAIN-RELEASING PLASTER the best external remedy ever produced.

Beware of imitations, and do not be deceived by misrepresentation. Ask for ALCOCK'S, and let no solicitation or explanation induce you to accept a substitute.

Now is the time to treat catarrh of long standing. Ely's Cream Balm reaches out and obtains cures, where all other remedies fail. Do not neglect procuring a bottle, as it will relieve you quick.

Rev. H. H. Fairall, D. D., editor of the Methodist, says editorially: "We have tested the merits of Ely's Cream Balm, and believe that by a thorough course of treatment it will cure almost every case of catarrh. Minors, as a class are afflicted with head and throat troubles, and catarrh seems more prevalent than ever. We cannot recommend Ely's Cream Balm too highly."

Apply Balm into each nostril. It is quickly absorbed. Gives relief at once. Price, 50 cents at druggists, or by mail.
