Salt Injurious if Given to Pigs in Large Quantities.

REASON PIGS ARE SCARCE.

Farmers Honest Enough to Admit That It is Largely Owing to Careless Methods.

Some of the farmers that have no hogs at present are honest enough to admit that it is largely owing to their carcless methods. There are others who have regarded hogs too troublesome to raise. Still another class have no pigs simply because the necessary car and thought were not given them. The latter class is a large one, and its rembers are the heaviest losers, having rad the expense of maintaining brood sows and having money invested. Dering the breeding season losses come from carcless mating, inbreeding, use of poorly bred boars, etc. In the farrowing season the lack of attention and poorly arranged pens result in many pigs being overlain. Pigs die when small from the effects of poor food given them and their dams and from having little sunshine and exercise. The pigs which lived through the first month were given corn and water with their dam instead of food suited to the build. pigs which fived through the first month were given corn and water with their dam instead of food suited to the building of bone and muscle in the pigs and to the production of milk by the sow. If they had been given shorts, rye mea', out meal and other bone and muscle to ming food with slops, very different results might have been obtained. Such treatile as all a goods occurrence at results might have been obtained. Such troubles as colds, scours, costiveness, etc., are usually the direct results of careless feeding or of exposure. In recent years many farmers have neglected their hogs that more attention might be given to grain-raising. There are not enough hogs in the country to supply the world's demand, and will not be during the next eighteen months. If the price of corn remains below 60 cents per bushel, it will pay to hold hogs during the coming year until they reach 300 nounds weight. year until they reach 300 pounds weight, provided one-fourth of this growth is made from clover or other grasses.

A veterinary correspondent writes to the Mark Lane Express: I am often asked about giving salt to pigs. Personally I should not like to allow them a free supply, which is what putting a lump in the trough means, and especiallump in the trough means, and especially to in-pigs or suckling sows or very young animals. Salt is decidedly injurious if given to pigs in large quantities, and leads to a condition that is described as salt-poisoning. A little will do no harm perhaps to large pigs; but, whether it is prejudice or because experience has demonstrated that it is bad for the animals, salt is never placed in the piggery. The cases where I have seen do mischief is where brine from the pickle tub has been mixed with the wash—butchers' prices: D, 4½c; Golden C, ask as it is never placed in the piggery. The cases where I have seem do mischief is where brine from hotels commonly bornaminent establishing blennial elections.

and talk over matters one would think theirs the only branch of farming that was worth carrying on. This is as it should be, as one will always succeed best in that which he believes to be the best. It is not as it should be, for when one thinks too much that his is the only thing worth doing he is apt to be narrow in his views and selfish in his regard for the rights of others. We want broadminded, whole-souled farmers—farmers who love their branch of husbandry and are willing to help their brother farmers who love their branch of husbandry and are willing to help their brother farmers in other lines of farming—men who make the most of their own work, but accord to others the same right. One way to accomplish this is to attend institutes and other meetings where men engaged in the various branches of farming are gathered together and the largeness and importance of each is dwelt upon.

Many tons of commercial fertilizers are bought and used by farmers that cannot afford to use it. Until a farmer saves and uses all the fertilizers available on the farm, he cannot afford to purchase fertilizers with his hard-earned dollars at $25 to $40 a ton. It will pay to dig out the soil under the stables in many instances and spread it on the land, as it contains a great deal of ammonia and other elements of fertility. Use the manure from the henhouse on hills of corn and potatocs or in the garden, and it will give excellent results. If a farmer will keep his eyes open, he will discover fertilizing material about his farm going to waste in sufficient quantities to grow quite a field of corn. Some way ought to be devised for saving all the liquids about the stable, as it is worth nearly if not quite as much as the solids.

How long shall we milk our cows? There is no rule as regards age; it all depends upon how long the cow will pay a profit on her cost of keep.

Feed contains just so much milk; to get this milk we must use the feed in such a way that it will be readily exten and digested; then, if the cows eating the feed are of the right kind, we will get all of the milk.

An abundant supply of pure water on the farm is essential both for health and profit. If you have not such, it might pay to invest some of your surplus earn-ings toward securing it. While, you are about it get a supply that will suffice for the house, the stock and the garden.
