Poor, bleeding Kansas, how she suffers! Swept by cyclones, devastated by chinch bugs, she is never free from affliction of a more or less disastrous nature and both the elements and men seem to be in collusion in an infernal conspiracy to waste her fields, dissipate her resources and forever exclude peace, prosperity and happiness from her borders. No sooner is she freed from one scourge or pestilence than another more terrible in aspect and deadly in effect looms up dark and ghastly on the horizon and perches like an ominous spectre upon the dome of her capital, there to sit with forbidding men in terrible silence to terrify people and destroy their peace of mind. Last year she was shaken from center to circumference with political convulsions and now she is again honeycombed with political conspiracies and menaced by dangers more terrible to contemplate and fearful in effect than any catastrophe which has yet threatened her sunflower-ornamented domain. Having nothing else with which to occupy themselves until the next campaign comes on, Anna L. Digea, Mrs. Lease, Helen Gonger and Susan B. Anthony, have pitched their camp within her borders, hoisted the banner of universal woman suffrage over it, raised the wail of downtrodden womanhood and declared that they will hold the fort and keep Kansas in an internal convulsion compared with which a "twister" or Dakota blizzard will be as a gentle evening zephyr stirred by the downy wing of a passing fairy, until women shall be permitted to take their place in politics and come out of the political thralldom in which they have suffered so long; until their voices are heard at the polls as well as the sewing circle and until they shall have a hand in making the laws and enforcing them, as well as making butter and padding obstreperous kids. This unconditional ultimatum has been received by the people of Kansas with great fear and trembling and undoubtedly the very near future will see the women of that state exalted to the high estate of law makers, in which capacity they will very likely exercise as much judgment and make as creditable records as most of the alleged men who have been entrusted with that responsible duty up to the present time. These developments though startling are not surprising since Kansas has long ago resolved itself into a common lunatic asylum, out of which nothing sensible could be expected to come.

SECRETARY CARLISLE has brought sorrow to the hearts of the silver men by his order of last week to man the mints to their full capacity for the purpose of coining $55,000,000 of gold bullion into coins of the denominations of $2, $5 and $10. It had been hoped by the friends of silver that this bullion would not be minted for circulation at all and especially in smaller coins than 10-dollar pieces, in which event there would naturally be a greater demand for fractional silver coins with which to make change. It is closely estimated that two-thirds of all the business transactions of the country are made in sums less than $10, and if silver could be used for all sums to that amount it would necessitate the circulation of a vast amount of the white metal. This arrangement would be almost as good as free coinage since there would be as much silver as gold in circulation and silver would then represent one-half the metallic circulating medium of the country. It is understood, however, that comparatively little of the gold bullion will be coined into pieces smaller than $10, the $5 coins not being in very great favor and the $2 pieces having altogether lost cast with the business fraternity and being much too small and easily lost for convenience. A very large per cent of the business of the country must necessarily be done with silver, it being the most durable, most convenient and altogether the money with which to make all the smaller business transactions. This country can have a single or gold standard in theory only, and the friends of silver are reassured that their favorite metal will always occupy a very large place in our monetary system. It has gained too great a prestige to ever be substituted, and we will never be able to do business without it however much adverse legislation may be enacted.

The silver speech of Senator Voorhees has been much talked about since it was delivered. It was in some respects one of the most remarkable heard in congress for some time, as well as one of the most dangerous. While professing the greatest admiration for the administration the Indiana Senator denounced the administration's pension policy and advocated the wildest sort of financial inflation, going further in some particulars than the populists, and advocating the overthrow of the National banking system and the putting of wild cat state banks in its place. He also advocates an income tax. If that speech was intended to be friendly to the administration Mr. Cleveland may well be excused for exclaiming "save me from my friends." It is said that Senator Voorhees purposely made his speech radical, in order to influence certain southern senators to vote for the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law, and it is said further that several of them have agreed to vote for the repeal bill upon the promise of Senator Voorhees that their views should be met in a financial bill to be reported from the Senate Finance Committee at an early day.

In addition to the investigation proposed by Senator Gallinger's resolution of the pension suspensions now being made by the administration, Col. Chas. P. Lincoln, who was deputy pension commissioner under the Harrison administration, proposes to carry the matter to the courts. Col. Lincoln is a lawyer of ability, and he believes that the law is being violated by the administration and that the court will upon proper presentation of the question grant an injunction restraining Secretary Hoke Smith from making further suspensions, except in cases where fraud is proven. No fraud is being alleged in the suspensions now being made. Soon after the present administration came into power a ruling was made by Hoke Smith that reverses the construction put upon the act of 1890 by the republican administration, and under that ruling the suspensions are being made, a procedure which it is believed the courts will declare illegal.

SPEAKER CRISP has settled the nature of the tariff bill that will be reported from the House Committee on Ways and Means by the appointment of Wilson, of W. Va., chairman of that committee. Mr. Wilson's free trade sentiments are well known and he says the committee will at once begin work on a tariff bill. It does not, however, necessarily follow that the free trade bill to be prepared by the house committee will become a law. It may get through the house, as the democratic majority in that body is so large that a few dissenters cannot materially affect the final result, but in the senate things are different. The democratic majority is small, and some of the democratic senators have privately informed republicans that they will not support a bill making radical cuts in the tariff.

GLADSTONE'S house rule bill has at last been passed through the English house of commons by a majority of 34. It now goes to the house of lords and that body will not withhold its concurrence. The effect will be to give Ireland a free local government and is a long stride toward the dissolution of monarchy in Great Britain. With such political freedom as this measure brings, Ireland ought soon to recover her former prosperity, and enact such laws as will free her people from the indignities from which they have so long suffered as a result of the unrighteous system of English landlordism.

A DEMOCRATIC exchange remarks that the calamity howler's occupation is gone. It is to be hoped that it is, and if so we see nothing more for the democratic party to accomplish as the conditions which the latter party has worked and voted for for the past thirty-five years are now being experienced in all their glory. If the democrats are as liberal as they claim to be they ought to be satisfied, since they are now getting what their party has advocated ever since it lost control of the government in 1860.

Among the incidents of childhood that stand out in bold relief, as an memory reverts to the days when we were young, none are more prominent than severe sickness. The young mother vividly remembers that it was Chamberlain's Cough Remedy that cured her of croup, and in turn administered it to her offspring and always with the best results. Charles Meerve and wife of Oregon City, were visitors here this week. The public schools began Monday with about seventy pupils in attendance. Miss Nora Conyers is at home again after an absence of several weeks in Oregon City.

A snow load of lumber from Bryant's mill went down the Clatskanie Tuesday evening destined to rebuild the Lauritz Jalma house that was recently destroyed by fire. Miss Ida Bozarth, of Woodland, Washington, is visiting her sister, Mrs. N. Merrill. She brought Miss Cressa Merrill with her, who has been spending some time at grandma's, in Woodland.

Tom Laws' friends and neighbors turned out Tuesday of this week to give him their assistance in a log rolling at his ranch on Lower Beaver. "Many hands make light work," and Tom extends his thanks for their help. A few enterprising young people of the town gave the school building a thorough scrubbing last Friday, and the school boards hanging around might dull the brains of the pupils during this term. The school treasury being exhausted the cleaning was a voluntary matter and the thanks of the patrons are due those who did the work so well. Mrs. English, Miss Fannie Bryant and Miss Cora Blackrock may take front seats what day boys when they water and assisted in swinging the broom may stand close behind and look over their shoulders, while the Professor makes his little speech of thanks.

Mr. Cleton, in a very neatly written and elegant impromptu address of welcome to the minister at the social last Saturday evening, made the (for him) surprising statement that a man is only half a man without a wife, and yet without a wife, himself, asks the Clatskanie school board to pay him a full man's salary for teaching, while he employs only half a man to do the work. The school board think of taking some action in his case, but have been advised to wait awhile as there are some indications pointing to the possibility of a promising lot of boys which may bring about that is at present lacking to fill his own ideal of manhood.

The community about Fishhawk, as well as at this place, were thrown into consternation Thursday, of last week, by the report of the death of a young man who was both well and favorably known from a residence of several years in the Nehalem valley. About noon Eric L. Jensen was doing his usual work in the field, and on the top of a dead and burning tree fell, part of which struck him on the head knocking him insensible and causing his death two hours later. He leaves a wife and six children and a host of sympathizing friends who feel that they have sustained a great loss in his being so suddenly removed from the earth. A resting place was found for his remains beneath the sod of his own farm where he was tenderly laid away on Friday. Across the river, old Mr. Van Valkenburg, eighty years of age, James was doing some work in a field to prevent a tree from burning his frame. When his son came up to where he was, he had gone out of his mind, his last words being "the tree was scorching. It is not known what caused the death, whether he had been struck by a burning ember or overcome by heat. He was one of the oldest settlers in the valley and respected by every one. He leaves a widow and family of grown up children, some of whom were living near him. His remains were taken to a burial ground near the church, on "the burn," above Mist.

Some years ago we were very much subject to severe spells of cholera morbus, and now when we feel any of the symptoms that usually precede that ailment, such as sickness at the stomach, diarrhea, etc., we become scared. We have found Chamberlain's Cholera, Colic and Diarrhea Remedy the very thing to straighten one out in such cases, and always keep it about. We are not writing this for a pay testimonial, but to let our readers know what is a good thing to keep handy in the house.—Troy, (Kan.) Chief. For sale by Edwin Ross.

BETTER THAN NIAGARA. Jabez Thought the Falls "Entry Fine," But Had More Fun on the Way. Under stress of great excitement or danger persons often do things of which they are quite unconscious and which would be entirely beyond their power under ordinary circumstances. Probably this fact accounts for the story which Jabez Flagg, a resident of Huckleberry, Vt., tells about his elder brother Abijah. The two men, middle aged, well to do bachelors, went to Niagara Falls for a week's "autumn" one September, when their summer's work was over and before the cold weather had "shut in."

"I tell ye," Jabez says, relating their adventure; "Bije ain't a sim ez he used to be, an he hed th' black feller—th' hod th' sleppin car in charge th' we took fr'm Boston—fetched out a fight o' f'm, an hold 'em firm whilst he maounded t' th' upper berth."

"Then th' feller took off th' steps, an Bije handed me down his boots. He r'minded me that I sh'd hev t' hand 'em up t' him in th' mornin' fore he got aout'n th' berth, b'cause he hedn't never ben able t' bear settin his stockin feet t' th' floor fr'm a child."

"So I put 'em in a handy place an we'd gev th' black feller orders t' fetch th' steps t' a cert'n time nex' mornin I turned in, feelin real peaceful an easy minded."

"Well, th' nex' thing I knew, I woke up w' th' kind of a jaunce like. I was sort o' dazed at first, but I heard folks runnin raound an talkin, an th' train was stock still. Then I heard somebody say somethin 'bout th' train's been on fire. I was pooty well waked up b' that time, an I riz right up an begun t' clap on my things."

"Somehow or 'nother I got a part of 'em on, an then I picked up Bije's boots, an started t' hand 'em t' him— a wonderin all th' time haow in Tunkett I was goin' to get him down aout o' th' berth—when I see he waunt up there!"

"I hasted along then car pooty lively, an aout on th' track, an I faound aout th' accident wa'n't of no gre't account. We'd clided w' 'nother train, but there hedn't ben no gre't speed on, they said, an nobody was killed or hurt much, an th' fire hed ben put out."

"But whilst I stood there, who sh'd come along but Bije, all 'xited up, talkin t' another man. He was in his stockin feet, an his clothes was pulled ev'ry which way. When he see me he looked ridic'ous."

"Haow'd ye got aout'n y'r berth, Bije?" I asked him. "I clumb aout, som'e anybody would," Bije said, lookin pooty red. "An haow 'bout steppin maound a' lively 'haout y'r shoes?" said I. "He didn't make me no answer, but jest stumped inter that car, an fetched the door shut after him."
