

You can Economize

By using Royal Baking Powder to the exclusion of all other leavening agents. The official analysts report it to be 2% greater in leavening strength than the other powders. It has three times the leavening strength of many of the cheap alum powders.

It never fails to make good bread, biscuit and cake, so that there is no flour, eggs or butter spoiled and wasted in heavy, sour and uneatable food.

Do dealers attempt, because times are dull, to work off old stock, or low grade brands of baking powder? Decline to buy them. During these times all desire to be economical, and Royal is the most Economical Baking Powder.

The Club of the Future.

A growing opinion is that the coming club will be the mixed one, where men and women will study together the questions that present themselves and work out together the problems of the day. And this, it is asserted, will not be a consolidation of the distinctively women's and men's clubs as they now exist, but a merging of the best elements of each into fresh organizations.

Following this mixed club sentiment it is not surprising to find Mr. Stead in a London journal advocating "co-operative homes for the unmarried." By this he means that the co-operative homes for spinners and those for bachelors should combine their housekeeping arrangements into a sort of idealized boarding house, where Mrs. Grundy would be appeased with an experienced lady housekeeper, and where companies of detached or unattached men and women could find congenial acquaintance. The limitations of the word "congenial" Mr. Stead insists upon and admits that this matter of selection is the weak point in his scheme. The motion in any form grows out of a recognized drifting apart of the sexes under the changed condition of things.—New York Times.

Penalty of a Small Vice.

Little vices have their inconveniences, as a Parisian burglar has just discovered to his cost. It appears that the other night a shop on one of the boulevards was broken into, and a strong box was found in the morning wrenched open and with the contents missing. At first it was thought that the burglar had left no trace, but on a careful examination of the floor a piece of chewed tobacco was discovered. This caused suspicion to rest on a former employee who was given to using tobacco in that particular way. He was sought out, and eventually such proofs of his guilt were forthcoming that he was convicted.—London News.

Marrying Among Relations.

In Persia it is an almost invariable custom to choose a wife from among one's relations, such as cousins in a near or remote degree, and only among acquaintances when failure has occurred in following the old habit. The Hebrews especially practiced a plurality of wives according to the law of Moses, and that shows how thoughtful they were of the future of their race—so much so that sterility in a wife was considered a sufficient reason for contracting another marriage.—Pall Mall Budget.

Texas' State Capitol.

The state capitol of Texas is the largest state building in the United States and the seventh in size among the buildings of the world. It is a vast Greek cross of red Texas granite, with a central rotunda covered by a dome 811 feet high. It was begun in 1881 and finished in 1888, having cost about $3,500,000. It was paid for with 3,000,000 acres of public land deeded to the capitalists who executed the work.—Exchange.

THE DEATH PENALTY.

SOCIAL COMPACT THAT UNDERLIES CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

The Fundamental Law of Man Which Compels the State to Take the Life of One Who Has by His Own Hand Taken the Life of Another—The Right to Take Life.

There is an infinite amount of loose thinking, speaking and writing about capital crime and its punishment. We are growing too much accustomed to hear murder trials discussed as if they were contests between prosecuting officers eager to establish the vengeance of a cruel and blood-thirsty state and the legal champions of the unfortunate prisoner seeking to escape the penalties of an unrighteous law. That is a false view of the matter—utterly false.

Reference is in order to the first principles on which society rests. There are some who think that which it seems need to be firmly reasserted.

There were natural laws long before any human laws were enacted. They are elemental, and their justice is self evident. Among these natural laws there is one that stands surely first. It is expressed in the words of the law of nature, "Thou shalt not kill." From this first law of nature it followed that when men lived without organized society and had no state, no written law, no courts and no regular machinery of justice, any man whose wife or daughter or son or brother or kinsman of any sort was slain, injured, or whose home was invaded by any kind of violence, had the right of retaliation in his own hands. If any of his household were slain, he had the right to kill the slayer.

This natural law rules everywhere today under the picket fence of organized civilization. It would rule in the United States again and instantly if it were distinctly proclaimed that laws and courts had ceased to exist and that every man, woman and child in the community had as much protection as and no more than that which he provides for himself. All the authorities on law and justice agree, and the common sense of the time of Moses down to the days of Recorder Smyth, have agreed upon this point, that the right of defensive and protective retaliation for injury is a natural one conferred by the Creator upon every man, and not to be taken away from him unless an equivalent protection be afforded to him.

The state is the product of civilization, but what is the state? The state is simply a social compact. It is a contract between every individual member of it and the collective community. The individual agrees to give up many of his individual rights. He agrees to give up the right to take the life of another man who assaults him or any of his kindred and binds himself never to kill, except when in his judgment his own life will be lost if he does not. The individual agrees further not to kill at sight the assassin or the violator of his wife or daughter, but to present to the state the man who has irreparably injured him to the public justice of the state. But the individual citizen is only one party to the social contract. The state also agrees to do certain things in return for the surrender of individual rights.

The state binds itself to give to the individual a rule of law. It is to protect him from the wrongs of other men. It is to protect the man who has been injured by the wrongs of other men. It is to protect the man who has been injured by the wrongs of other men. It is to protect the man who has been injured by the wrongs of other men.

The law which makes murder punishable with death is the logical outcome of that compact between the state and the individual citizen. It is idle to talk of the state as having any malice to gratify or any vengeance to appease against such a man as Alvin Karpis, the murderer of Charles W. Warren, New Hampshire, or Harris in New York. Society collectively can not and does not seek the life of any man. But the state has a compact under which it is stipulated that the natural right of private vengeance shall not be exercised, yet by that same compact it fulfills its duty to every household within its borders from such invasions and violations, and to do it by placing every man in the community under a bond not to kill, with the penalty attached to the bond that if he will not let another live neither shall he live himself.

When a man is murdered, the state is bound to protect the man who has been injured by the wrongs of other men. It is to protect the man who has been injured by the wrongs of other men. It is to protect the man who has been injured by the wrongs of other men.

A Relative of a Miser. "It was unlucky enough in my infancy to have had an uncle who was a miser, and what is still more exasperating, who had money," said Harold Macomber. "This uncle died when I was 15 years old and I inherited considerable of personal and realty possessions to his relatives. Being one of no more than three nephews and two nieces, he willed me his old homestead, an uncut looking affair, but one that was fairly valuable for its location in G—. Now, then, the fact that my uncle was a miser preyed upon my mind to such an extent that I did not rest well. I had an aching suspicion that my uncle had stored up his money in some box and buried it, or sewed it in some sack and used it for a pillow, or did something else with it equally incongruous. When I attained my majority, I resolved that I would find that money if it was in the old homestead, and I could think of no place else so appropriate, or so liable to contain it. I spent any number of days ransacking that old place, looking high and low for the hidden wealth.

"I sounded the wall for hidden closets and tapped every inch of the floor to obtain a dull sound of extra resistance. I examined the fireplace, the garret and the cellar, but to no purpose. I did not find the suspicious wealth. I crawled under the house later and examined the floor and ground without results. Then I bethought myself of the cistern, and I planned at once to have it emptied. In this cistern there was a double floor or base, and between the two I found a hermetically sealed case which contained some literary effusions and a number of old family trinkets of gold, but no money. The last discovery disgusted me, and I concluded that my uncle was not a miser after all, but only a much over-estimated old crank. Since then I have slept better."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Why the skin of the rhinoceros lays in folds and ridges. Certainly if the waters were hot enough to "pickle and scald" a dove's legs at the moment of contact, they would make the skin of a rhinoceros too large for him in the course of 40 days!

"But," you say, "why was he exposed in the waters of the great deluge while all the other beasts were safely housed in the ark?" Simply because he was too large to be put aboard the great life ship. The bulk of the old rabbinic writers agree that the rhinoceros floated along with the ark, but they disagree as to how the floating operation was performed.—St. Louis Republic.

An Eskimo Trick. The short, chunky, wooden looking Eskimo men wheeled silver over the top of the populace by playing a game requiring considerable skill. This consists in lifting a donated nickel or dime out of the ground by the crack of a whip. The whips these chaps use are like an ordinary ball good, with a number of leather lashes added to the total length of 24 feet. They shoot these long lashes along the ground like snakes straight at a coin set edge up in the dirt, and as each tip reaches the spot it curls with a snap like a pistol shot and likely as not lifts the coin high in the air. It goes to whoever gets it in that way.—Chicago Cor. New York Sun.

STOCK GAMBLING.

The "Bulls," the "Bears," the Amateurs and Brokers and Their Methods.

I do not know how it is in London, Paris and the other great cities of Europe, but I can hardly believe that the number of persons in any of them who speculate in stocks bears so large a proportion to the entire population as it does here in New York. Men, of all ages, and of all degrees of education and of every degree of pecuniary ability habitually engage in operations on our Stock Exchange and find in them amusement if not profit. Indeed, if the stock brokers had for customers only investors and professional speculators, half at them and probably more could not make a living. The commissions and interest paid them by merchants, lawyers, doctors, manufacturers and retired capitalists, not to mention women, furnish the greater part of their incomes, and the very magnitude of this miscellaneous crowd, augmented as it is by recruits from other cities of the United States, makes the business of money, renders a breakdown in the market exceedingly easy.

As is well known, the amateur stock operator expects to make his gains by selling at a higher price than he buys at. This is the natural method of conducting business in living. The commissions and interest on stock transactions follow as a matter of course. The many legends current of people who have acquired fortunes by purchasing apparently worthless stocks at nominal prices and subsequently selling them at an enormous advance also helps to confirm amateur stock operators in their course of living. The commissions and interest on stock transactions follow as a matter of course. The many legends current of people who have acquired fortunes by purchasing apparently worthless stocks at nominal prices and subsequently selling them at an enormous advance also helps to confirm amateur stock operators in their course of living.

Amateur stock gamblers, besides being for the most part bulls, have rarely enough ready cash of their own to pay for what they desire to buy, and hence what cash they have is loaned to them by the brokers to their brokers to furnish the rest. This the brokers do by borrowing from banks, trust companies and private lenders, and the aggregate of these borrowings runs up into the millions and tens of millions. What the result is when these loans are called in, and the borrower cannot pay, is to protect the broker, and so the broker to protect himself sells out the customer's stocks, and when a hundred brokers are doing the same thing at once the wonder is not that prices go down, but that they do not go down more.

It is evident that the stock market, being thus a rule, supported by purchasers with borrowed money, is always liable to collapse whenever borrowing becomes difficult. It is a pyramid balanced on its apex, ready to topple over with a slight push in one direction or another. When this push is strong, owing to the sudden attacks upon a few reliable stocks, and the consequent loss of loans resulting from the apprehensions of lenders, the overturn of the pyramid is inevitable, and the number of those who are caught and crushed under it is very large. Still this is a peril to which the victims voluntarily expose themselves, and they have no right to complain of the blame of their misfortune upon others. It was old Andrew Jackson, I think, who uttered the sage aphorism that men who trade upon borrowed money ought to fail, or, as a more modern authority once put it, "Son of a gun, don't buy what you can't pay for, and don't sell what you haven't got."—Matthew Marshall in New York Sun.

The Fall in the Price of Borax.

Up to 1857 borax came to us from the East Indies, Persia and Italy, and was refined in Venice and in England and imported at a cost of $1 a pound, often more, its high price offering strong temptation to adulteration.

In 1859 the price had fallen to 40 cents a pound, and in 1879 to 11 cents, and from that time borax has remained a cheap commodity within the reach of all.

How has this been brought about? So sharp of disaster and human suffering, so sharp that the valley first found to be rich in this deposit bears the name, "The Death Valley," where the discoverers of the borax deposits found in 1857 the remains of emigrant wagons undecayed, and their tracks still plain in the hardened sand, though 30 years had passed since hope left them, and the little company one by one lay down to die.

Gold alone had been the object of the party who sought to enter California by way of Salt Lake, and who, halting in the Death Valley in Inyo county, Cal., found a heat so intense that, added to the lack of water, it made further progress impossible, only a few of the stronger ones escaping to tell the tale.

Later experts, sent out to report if gold were really to be found in the valley, came upon the borax fields and later the deposits in Nevada. From the Pacific coast 4,000,000 pounds a year are supplied for home consumption, which has now reached the astonishing total of 10,000,000 pounds yearly, with a constantly growing demand. Since introduced into family use, whether in kitchen, laundry or nursery, it becomes an essential.—Epicure.

Latest Marine Disaster.

He is a skipper of a coasting schooner, but he had a week off, and as "dad was laid up with rheumatiz" he turned to and helped out with the spring plowing. He found it a little more than he bargained for, but with the old mare on ahead, and this was a combination that he had never handled before. However, with a boy to drive, he pitched in heroically. When the crash came, it was a demoralizing one. One ox got his leg over the chain, while another slipped down a side hill. The other ox flopped over its mate with a crash, and the mare was pulled down on her haunches and sat like Tower on a doorstep.

Climate and Disease in Japan. The European sojourning in Japan is particularly affected through his nervous system and his respiratory organs, as a result of the humidity and the abrupt changes of temperature. In regard to the respiratory apparatus it appears that the number of movements is augmented, and the tension of the aqueous vapor being very great that of the oxygen is diminished with resulting reduction in haematosia, thus opening the door to all maladies through depression of nutrition—from rheumatism and diabetes to gout and anemia, which are everyday diseases in Japan. Contrary, in fact, to the general notion, central Japan possesses a climate exceedingly favorable to the development of anemia.

Queer Japanese Beliefs.

The Japanese believe in more mythical creatures than any other people on the globe, civilized or savage. Among these are mythical animals without any remarkable peculiarities of conformation, but gifted with supernatural attributes, such as the tiger which is said to turn as white as a polar bear on the date of his one thousandth birthday. They also believe in a species of fox which if it lives to be 50 years old without having been chased by a dog transforms itself into a beautiful woman. This same fox, if he can manage to live for a century, gains additional powers, such as becoming a wonderful wizard, etc. When he lives to be 1,000 years old, he becomes a "celestial fox," with nine golden tails, and has the power of going to heaven and returning whenever he chooses.

These Japs also believe in a multitude of animals distinguished by their monstrous size or by the multiplication of their members. Among these are serpents 800 feet long and large enough to swallow an elephant; boxes with eight legs; monkeys with four ears and seven tails; fishes with 10 heads attached to one body; the flesh of this last monster being a sure cure for boils, bites of poisonous serpents, hydrophobia, etc.—Philadelphia Press.

PUBLIC SPEAKING.

This is one of the heaviest strains that comes upon any man or woman. A little cold, a little hoarseness, and the work is done. The best of ability is rendered absolutely useless.

Mark Guy Pearce, the eminent English preacher, writes as follows:
"BIRCHWOOD PLACE, RUSSELL SQUARE, LONDON, December 10, 1888.
"I think it only right that I should tell you of how much use I find ALCOCK'S PLEURAL PLEASURES in my family and among those to whom I have recommended them. I find them a very beneficial remedy for colds and coughs."

SWINGING AROUND THE CIRCLE

Of the diseases to which it is adapted with the best results, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a family medicine, comprehensive in its scope, has never been thrust upon public attention in the guise of a universal panacea for bodily ills. This claim, daily asserted in the columns of the daily press by the proprietors of medicine, is a gross and unwarranted advance by its absurdity, and the prospects of other remedies of superior quality have been handicapped by the pretensions of their worthless competitors. But the American people know, because they have verified the fact by the virtues of a real specific in cases of malarial and liver disorder, constipation, nervous, rheumatic, stomach and kidney trouble. What it does it does thoroughly, and mainly for this reason it is endorsed and recommended by hosts of respectable medical men.

"I've been told that Jenkins has been calling me a coward and a thief." "Pooh! I wouldn't mind. You know he never gets anything more than half right any time."
