The Ship Owners' Association of San Francisco has commenced a new design in the shipping world for existing vessels, and from present appearances it is likely that considerable benefit will result not alone to sailors, but to owners of vessels. Briefly reviewed, the plan put in operation is to secure for coasting vessels the very best sailors that can be obtained. The men are rated according to the work that they perform. If they prove acceptable, they are compensated not only in wages but are given a rank which insures their speedy employment on other vessels.

Generally speaking, affairs have run smoothly, but there are a few captives who desire to be free from all rules and would like to ship men from all places and whenever they see fit. They are in the minority, however, and it is evident that they will have to join the majority before long. From the record book it is learned that there are applications from over 1,000 sailors, all of whom are classed under the headings of very good and good. Men are by no means scarce, and the association has made remarkable headway.

There is much complaint among exhibitors over the delay in awarding World's Fair medals. As many of the exhibitors expect to make the most of their medals in an advertising way, they complain that the great delay will rob them of much of the commercial advantage which they expected to reap in return for the medals. Some exhibitors are making the World's Fair exhibit, the design by St. Gaudens for official medals is here, but the contracts for manufacturing the medals has not yet been awarded, and it is still even more certain whether the work may not be done by the United States mint.

The plan of the Treasury officials contemplates medals of elegant workmanship that would require four or five months, as it would necessitate stamping some of them 400 or 500 times, and it does not seem probable the work will be completed before the summer.

The blame is laid to the Committee of Awards or to Designer St. Gaudens for not furnishing the designs earlier.
