THE NEW TARIFF.

England, as is naturally supposable, is immensely pleased with the new tariff bill recently framed by the ways and means committee and which is soon to be presented for adoption by the administration. Although very little is given in the new bill that was advocated by the party leaders and included in the Chicago platform, there is probably enough embodied in it to harmonize the two contending factions of democrats, and in a measure satisfy the radical free trade wing, while at the same time it is not strong enough to incite fresh rebellion in the ranks of the more conservative or manufacturing contingent of the party, who wish to see a feint made at carrying out the precepts of the platform without doing anything that will injure there personal interests, but the little the party has had the assurance to do in the way of removing tariff in the teeth of the storm which is raging against the proposition to make reductions in existing tariffs, is sufficient to swamp the party when the voters of the country get another opportunity to render a verdict in their case. Labor is to be wounded in its most vital spot. Iron, wool, lumber, cotton, and rice, all of which are the production of unskilled labor, are to be added to the list of unprotected articles, while the products of skilled labor, which represents by far the fewest numbers, is to be more or less protected, thus dealing a fatal blow to a class of labor least able to receive it. The simple effect of such legislation will be to complete the ruin of an already helpless and beggared people, by opening our markets to the products of the pauper laborer of Europe and the worse than pauper labor of other parts of the world; for, with existing duties upon these articles removed, it will be an easy matter for the foreign producer of raw materials to unload his productions upon our market and totally destroy all possibility of the American laborer finding employment unless he is willing or forced by hunger to work for the same beggarly pittance—it cannot be dignified with the name of wages—that the European pauper is forced to accept. The argument advanced in favor of free trade was that it would reduce the price of everything the laborer buys, making his living cheaper. This is a fact but a fatal one. If the producer receives less for his products he must necessarily reduce the expense of production, and the first place he will begin will be the price of his labor. The labor vote was very largely instrumental in bringing about this unfavorable change, and must now suffer the wounds it has inflicted upon itself.

A deplorable result of the change is the fact that the most helpless element of the labor class is the one to suffer the most, and the blow recoils upon them with terrible effect.

When the mere threat of tariff tinkering was made, the effect was to close nearly every manufacturing establishment and mine in the country because the dealer in these products could not see the philosophy of buying either manufactured goods or raw materials at protection prices, and being obliged to sell them at the prices which such commodities will bring when placed in competition with goods manufactured of free raw material and by foreign pauper labor. The misguided laborer sees to late the mistake he has made, but has no means of relieving his unpleasant situation until he is again called to the polls to dictate the policy of the country, and it will then remain with him to say whether this country shall enjoy protection and prosperity or continue free trade and suffer industrial ruin.

A CHANGE NECESSARY.

The farmers of this county must soon realize that they must adopt a more profitable system of farming before that industry will become a paying one, and in order to do this it will be necessary to cultivate crops that will be easiest to market and bring the highest cash price. In this connection it must be claimed that hops and fruit enjoy an especial advantage over any other crop that can be produced here. The former offers better inducements to the farmer than the latter, and is by all odds the best crop that can be grown in this county for several reasons, principal among which is the fact that they are always salable at prices which net the producer a cash return and a handsome profit for his outlay of time and labor. The reason that so many farmers have failed to make a success in their line is the simple fact that they have failed to cultivate profitable and salable crops. The farmers of the lower Columbia have always thought that unless they devoted their entire farms and attention to raising and feeding hay they could not possibly realize any profits. To a few, hay-raising has been a small source of revenue, but it has always been an unsatisfactory one and one that has always kept them poor, while with others it has been a dismal failure. If the farmer of this county can be induced to get out of the old rut they have followed so long, plow up their meadows and plant them to hops and fruit, they will do the county a material benefit and start themselves upon the road to prosperity and success.

The Astoria Railroad.

Recently there has developed another scheme to build a railroad to Astoria, a matter in which Columbia county people feel more or less interested, and from the tenor of the following dispatch from that city "it certainly seems as though the proposition is a fair one:"

"Astorians are all agog over still another proposition to give this city transcontinental railroad connection, and as usual a very large section of the community thinks that it is a sure thing. It is certainly a proposition that seems like business, however. J. C. Stanton, and J. S. Smith, both New York capitalists, and both rated well in Bradstreet's, came to this city some weeks ago to look over the country. They were brought here from New York by Walter C. Smith and E. A. Seeley, of Portland, and went away seeming pleased with their trip, though they would not talk. They now make an offer to purchase and complete into Astoria the Seaside road on or before May 1, 1894, and to complete a railroad from this city to Goble before January 1, 1895. For this they require 3000 acres of land and a right-of-way forty feet wide through the entire water front of Astoria. This land subsidy is to be placed in the hands of some solid Portland trust company, and is to be paid over to them in quarterly installments as earned. The former Goble proposition was embodied in a company known as "The Columbia River & Astoria Railroad Company.' That company possesses twenty miles of right-of-way, options on a good deal more, a well-located line, established last year by W. H. Kennedy's surveys, and maps, charts and profiles, the latter valued at $14,000. The new scheme will absorb this company and its possessions, taking the old name to save incorporation.

The principal condition insisted on by Mr. Stanton is that the subsidy shall all be raised by January 10. All the large holders of property on both sides of the bay have signified their willingness to donate liberally, and they are now trying to induce small holders to do their share. Among these smaller holders is right where the main difficulty lies. They are suspicious of every man that donates anything to a subsidy, and the moment they begin to believe that their property may become at all valuable by the acquisition of a railroad, they do their best to hold onto every foot of it, hoping that their neighbors will give enough to make up the amount of land required. Stanton and Smith have formed a construction company in New York with a capital stock of $1,000,000, of which $650,000 is subscribed, $250,000 of which is immediately available. The whole road to be built is eighty-two miles long, including sidings and the seashore extension, and the total computed cost at the present prices of material and labor is $1,350,000. Stanton says he will begin construction the moment the subsidy is raised. He has engaged Kennedy as his chief engineer."

The Republican Bunghole.

Prof. Rork, in one of his great speeches in this county, compared the republican party to the barrel that came over in the Mayflower, and described it something like this: "The gentleman who owned the barrel asked a friend to visit his home and see it, and said that it was all there, but the staves, hoops and both heads, whereupon the friend asked what part of it came over in the Mayflower and received the answer that the bunghole was the only part that made the voyage. Professor Rork stated that all that was now left of the republican party was the bunghole. We bet a four dollar horse to a gooseberry that Mr. Rork now thinks that it must be a duced big bunghole.

Oregon's First Newspaper.

In a reminiscent article in the Statesman of a recent number, the veteran editor, James O'Mara, says: "In the whole of Oregon Territory, of nearly 400,000 square miles extent from which have since been carved the states of Washington, Idaho, Montana and Oregon, embracing the vast region between parallels of 42 and 49 north latitude from the western slope of the Rocky mountains to the Pacific ocean, there was at the time of its formation by the government in 1848, but one newspaper, the Oregon Spectator, published weekly, at Oregon City, the capital of the territory. The Spectator was founded in 1846 and continued until 1849. In its line of editors were Wm. G. T. Vault, H. A. G. Lee, G. L. Curry and A. E. Wait. George L. Curry was the last territorial governor of Oregon and A. E. Wait subsequently, was made chief justice of the supreme court of the state. John Fleming was printer, a pioneer veteran of the craft, and was afterwards postmaster of Oregon City, the first to hold office under the goverment of the United States.
