A Consumptive Cautious.

One of the latest inventions for preventing the spread of consumption is a small pocket spittoon made out of cardboard. They are about the size of an ordinary cigar case and of the same general shape. They can readily be carried in the pocket, and being made of disinfected paper they are perfectly clean and healthy to carry about. One can spit into them very readily without disgusting those around. When full this novel spittoon is intended to be thrown aside to poison the air.

Consumptives who are compelled to spit often can carry these pocket spittoons around with them at all times. By sliding them out from the inside coat pocket one could expectorate in them without being seen. They are also recommended for others than consumptives who have the habit of spitting continually.—Yankee Blade.

CURES SCROFULA
Mrs. E. J. Rowell, Medford, Mass., says her mother has been cured of scrofula by the use of four bottles of S.S.S. After having had much other treatment, and being reduced to a low condition of health, as it was thought she could not live.
Cured my little boy of scrofula, which appeared all over his face. For a year I had given up all hope of his recovery, when finally I was induced to use S.S.S. and after a few bottles he was cured, and all symptoms of the disease remain.

PSYCHIC SUGGESTION.

Can Hypnotic Subjects Be Induced to Commit Crime?

SOME IMPORTANT EXPERIMENTS.

Evidence That Persons of Upright Tendencies Will Not Commit Crimes Under Hypnotic Suggestion—The Proposition to Hypnotize Mrs. Maybrick.

According to Professor Lombroso, the great Italian authority on hypnosis and criminology, the proposition to establish the innocence of Mrs. Maybrick by hypnosis is not likely to have any very satisfactory result, even though the British home secretary should consent to the experiment. After citing several cases in his own practice, the professor says:

"While my experiments prove the purpose treatment of criminals for the purpose of eliciting confessions is useless and often dangerous, it may serve the cause of justice in some cases to subject it to a person protesting his innocence and against whom no direct proof has been obtained. Such a person, if not shamming, would reiterate his statement of innocence and perhaps divulge some secrets, liable to aid in the establishment of the truth, which heretofore were withheld for reasons of delicacy or to shield friends."

"Hypnotism," says the professor, "is impossible to hypnotize an unwilling person; neither can a person be prevailed upon to commit actions opposed to his interests or to self-implication while under the spell of hypnotism. With the professional and born criminal the habit of lying is so strong as to make him indifferent to physical or mental conditions."

In this connection the subject of criminal suggestion is interesting. It is a question which has provoked much discussion among students of the science of hypnosis and one on which great difference of opinion exists. Dr. Tourrette of Paris tried an experiment on a patient of morose and surly disposition. Under hypnotic suggestion the subject committed what he believed to be a murder, and when awakened and told of his crime proceeded most indignantly to justify himself without expressing any remorse.

Dr. Montpallier of Paris, in trying a somewhat similar experiment, met with a different result. His subject was a woman of a gentle nature. After she had been put to sleep the doctor told her that there were some people present who annoyed her. "Oh, nonsense," was the reply. The doctor insisted that they did, and pointing out a Mr. D. told the patient that she must poison him. "I will not," was the firm reply. "But you must—I will it," said the doctor. "Here is the glass with the poison. You must drink it."

The patient, after a severe struggle with herself, finally took the glass, and going up to Mr. D. said, "You must drink this," almost forcing it down his throat. When awakened and told what she had done, she was overcome by the horror of her imaginary crime, and making up to Mr. D. she claimed, with piteous sincerity: "Oh, sir, quick, take an antidote. If you die, do forgive me before you die."

Here it is demonstrated that, though under strong pressure a hypnotic subject may be induced to commit a crime, instantly on awakening he will protest and in every way seek to undo the evil done. Legassie of Nancy, touching the subject of criminal suggestion, says it is not the question whether hypnotic suggestion renders the prosecution of crime more difficult, but whether it really can be employed to commit crimes or cause them to be committed.

Dr. Ladame replies to this that the question can only be solved in the affirmative sense. "The proof has been experimentally made, and if the experiments have not acquired an absolute value it is because they have not as yet been conducted by honest men." This is a fair summary of the opinion of those who believe that hypnosis can be used as an agent of crime.

On the other hand, it would seem that the majority of experts are of a totally different opinion. Nobody stood higher in the esteem of his profession than did the late Professor Charcot. He was very emphatic in his opinion that criminal suggestion was not "nothing but a suggestion," but a real use of hypnosis by means of suggestion, and was fully recognized by students of hypnosis.

Dr. Tourrette scoffs at the idea that any one has been able to make a criminal. Though he has made many experiments, he flatly refuses to regard them of any practical value, and he declares that they are "laboratory crimes." "Let them produce one authentic case, the proof of a real assassination committed under suggestion," he says, "and our opinion will not even then be convinced."

Dr. Tourrette confesses to having induced sleep in some 30,000 individuals, but not one of them could be influenced against his will. De Courmelles most emphatically rejects the theory of criminal suggestion. He says the suggestion may be repeated, but it is absolutely powerless to transform, as has been asserted, a criminal into an honest man, or vice versa.

The dominant will power of man cannot be directed into foreign channels except by his sanction. The existence of a discriminating sense of right and wrong, even in the most general acceptance of the term, is a sufficient guarantee of the resistance to the suggestion of a crime committed. Our will fluctuates, so to speak, and we are all of us fully conscious of existing flaws in our makeup. Still we are cognizant that for the preservation of law and order it is imperative that we check any tendency to crime which our disposition might suggest. Nobody is irresponsible. If it can be proved that crime has been committed through direct or indirect criminal suggestion, the originator of such must suffer as an accomplice. This does not in the least excuse the executor of the act.

Forest Trees in Gardens.
According to Dr. Chapman, the practice of allowing forest trees to grow in our gardens "only prejudices the health of our families." The so-called purifying power of vegetation is a fallacy. If carbonic acid gas is absorbed by trees in the daytime it is exhaled during the night. Dense foliage prevents a free current of air, excludes the sunlight, causes damp and so on, and malodorous number are the result. Dr. Chapman's warning seems hardly necessary, as our large cities at least.—London Tit-Bits.

Hypnotism as a Cure.
Dr. Brawley of the English Harveian society claims that he and other specialists in hypnosis have cured or beneficially treated by hypnotic suggestion cases of neuralgia, nervous prostration, insomnia, seasickness and dizziness, drunkenness, Dr. Wetherbrand contends that hypnosis is particularly beneficial in epilepsy and dipomania. Dr. Brawley considers hypnosis not as a rival to ordinary medicine, but as a medical weapon to be used in connection with other treatments.—New York Ledger.

How He Did It.

"Say, mister," said the tattered traveler, "kin I have a word with you?" "You go away from here," said Freddie Van Fizzle. "I shall call the police right away if you do not." "And yet I have moved in the same society with the Bloobhinds." "You don't say so? Heah, poor fellow, is 50 cents for you. How did you get outwaded to them?" "I jes' walked into the house when they was havin' a reception." "But you said you moved in the same society?" "Yes, I hadn't been there more'n two minutes before the footman told me to move, and I did it. So long, chappie!"—Washington Star.

The Danbury New's Man's Wit.
Mr. Bailey's wit has a delicious mental flavor. In fact, it is always the shrewd, thoughtful man that enjoys it. It is not in long, drawn-out sentences, but a flash of thought. The humorist says a poor man came to him, with tears in his eyes one day, asking for help for his destitute and starving children.

"What do you need most?" asked Mr. Bailey. "Well, we need bread, but if I can't have that I'll take tobacco."

One day a solemn and religious Danbury man hailed a charcoal peddler with the query: "Have you got charcoal in your wagon?" "Yes, sir," said the expectant driver, stopping his horses.

"That's right," observed the religious man, with an approving nod. "Always tell the truth, and people will respect you." And then he closed the door just in time to escape a brick hurled by the wicked peddler.

One day I asked Mr. Bailey if they had any men in Connecticut. "Lazy men!" he exclaimed. "Why have a man in the house and say that instead of shoveling a path to the front gate he pinches the baby's ear with the nippers till the neighbors come rushing in to tread down the snow?"

Mr. McMaisters was buying a home of Mr. Bailey and asked him if the house was cold in winter. "Cold," said Bailey cautiously. "I can't say as to that. It stands outdoors." Speaking of the Indian raids, says Bailey: "The Modocs have made another raid on our people and murdered them. If ever our government gets hold of these savages, gets them rich where they cannot escape, gets them wailing in their clutches, some contractor will make money."—From "Twenty Years of Wit and Humor."

THE COMPLEXION OF A CHINESE.
Is not yellower than that of an unfortunate individual whose liver complaint has assumed the chronic form. The eyeballs of the sufferer assume a saffron hue, there is dull pain in the region of the organ affected, the tongue is coated, and so on, to be counteracted by a course of treatment. Bile is sometimes expelled in the form of a very common ailment, always in its aggravated form, liable to breed abscesses of the liver, which are very dangerous. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters wholly eradicates it, as well as the troubles complicated with it and which originate in bile. In child and fever, a complaint which always yields to the Bitters, the liver is seriously involved. This fine alternative tonic removes constipation, indigestion, rheumatism, nervous and kidney trouble and debility.

Few people can stand prosperity; but they are legion compared with the people who never have a chance to stand fit.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adopting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value of health of the pure liquid axative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs. It is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance. Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

AROUSING HIS SUSPICIONS.

Why a German Barkeeper and His Irish Customer Are Strangers Now.

There is a certain German barkeeper up town who is nursing a vigorous wrath and a particular knotty black thumb, because of an unknown person with an Irish accent and an engaging address.

One night the stranger stepped up to the bar and asked for a quart of gin in a black bottle which he placed on the bar. The barkeeper filled the bottle, and the man walked toward the door.

"Here!" called the barkeeper. "You give me no money for dot chini!" "Ah, mark it dot down on the slate, will yer?" "We heff no slet; you give me back dot chini or give me my money."

"Not a cent, not a cent; take back your stuff if you won't have it up." So the man handed back the bottle to the barkeeper, who poured the contents of the bottle into the sink.

A week later, almost at the same hour, the door bell rang again. "Hey, Dutch, give us a quart of gin, will yer?" The unsuspecting barkeeper poured the liquor into the bottle, he handed over the bar and, as before, the man took the bottle and started off.

"Here, you, give me my money or my chini. What do you, hey? Flim flam me? Give me dot chini!" "Ah, mark it dot down on the slate."

"We don't kip no slet—give me dot chini!" "Oh right. Take your damned old gin and be cussed wid yer!" The bottle was handed back across the bar, and the man again disappeared into the night. Again the liquor trickled down into the sink.

Four or five times, on as many nights, the same incident was enacted. Then the barkeeper became suspicious. "Dot man buys him no chini," he soliloquized, "but alretty he comes him beek axin' a quart of gin. A week later the man appeared again, with:

"Hey, Dutch, fill this in a hurry, will yer?" "Haf you got any money dis time, hey?" "Let us look at some of dot money, hein?" The man showed a neat roll of bills, and the barkeeper filled the bottle and handed it across the bar.

"Here, you, just give me beek der chini Vat yan, hey?" Once again the bottle passed back into the barkeeper's possession, and again the man went away. But this time the bottle was not emptied into the sink.

Raising the bottle to his lips, the barkeeper tasted its contents. Then he smashed the bottle on the floor and the air was thick with his invectives. A policeman, hearing the noise, poked his head inside the door and saw a raving barkeeper, who was saying:

"Dot ———— swindler. I brek his feal. Where he is?" And then it was all explained. The man with the Irish accent and the engaging personality had come each time with two bottles. One was empty, the other full of water. When he turned to the side door, he dexterously changed the bottle of gin for the bottle of water and gave the latter to the barkeeper instead. Six times he practiced the deception successfully, but if he ever returns there may be a case for the district court to pass on.—New York World.

Old Time Counterfeits.
A miner operating on Miller's ranch, near Latrobe, while following up a "pocket" lead unearthed an iron pot containing $1,000 in what appeared to be gold coins. They turned out, however, to be counterfeit. Some old miners tell that about 1853 there was a lively camp near the spot where the bogus coin was found. Two young men lived near the camp, and they always were well supplied with money, which they spent freely. They had the very best of everything going.

As those young fellows were never known to do any work and as they never gambled any and consequently could not have won the money they spent so freely, it soon began to be whispered about that they were counterfeit money makers. From this circumstance the place became known as "Counterfeit Hill." The suspicion against the young men became so general that they were alarmed and disappeared from the camp, and all traces of them were lost, and they were forgotten until the incident narrated above brought them to mind again.—Folsom Telegraph.

Too Much.
"My dear, I am afraid I must let Ellen go." "You surprise me. I thought she was a splendid cook. What have you discovered? Does she drink, steal, swear, break dishes, stay out too?" "None of those things. She's perfect, and that's just the trouble. My nerves can't stand the suspense. I am sure she is some terrible criminal in hiding."—Brooklyn Life.

THE GENUINE AND THE SHAM.

Every good thing has its counterfeit; every genuine article its counterfeit. The imitators always choose the most valuable and popular article to counterfeit, so that when they claim their sham to be equal, or as good, or the same as the original, the public may depend upon it that "So-and-so's" article is the best of the kind.

ALLCOCK'S PINKET PLASTER is the standard of excellence the world over, and imitators in their cry that there is "as good as ALLCOCK'S" are only emphasizing the fact and admitting "ALLCOCK'S" to be the acme of perfection, which is its right and its due. The difference between the genuine and these imitations is as wide as that between copper and gold.

The only safe way for purchasers is to always insist upon having ALLCOCK'S PINKET PLASTER. It is the only perfect plaster ever produced. BRANDRETH'S PILLS stimulate the liver. Jack Frost is the only person whose fruitless efforts are a success.

Cured of Scurfula by Hood's
Scurfula permeates humanity. It is thoroughly infused into the blood. Scarcely a man is free from it, in one form or another. Hood's Scurfula cures scurfula promptly, surely, permanently. Thousands of people say so.

For instance, read this: "I am justified in thinking Hood's Scurfula a splendid medicine by own experience with it. I was a great sufferer from scurfula, having dreadful sores in my ears and on my head, sometimes like large boils, discharging all the time. My husband insisted that I take Hood's Scurfula.
