THE POOR MAN'S TARIFF.

No doubt the people of the United States have experienced a sense of restful satisfaction in the surcease which they have had for several months from the eternal tariff discussion, which had been dinned into their ears by politicians, and repeated ad nauseam by the press for more than half a score of years. But if any one imagines that the subject has been disposed of for good he is greatly mistaken. When the democratic majority in congress succeeded in passing the Wilson bill, as altered in the senate, the country at large was disposed to give the measure a fair trial, notwithstanding the fact that the president refused to sign it and made a frantic effort to keep the agitation alive, with the hope of securing changes in the bill during the short session of congress that followed. But neither the people at large nor Mr. Cleveland's own party would listen to the proposition to reopen the discussion at that time. It was the desire of every one, outside of the Cleveland-Wilson clique, to give the subject a rest, and to give the new schedules a trial, as already set forth.

But there are reasons for believing that the attention of the country is likely to be directed at an early day to the practical working of the new law, especially in regard to the effect upon the imports of manufactured merchandise. This is certain to reopen the discussion of the economic and fiscal principles in dispute between the two parties. The publication last week by the Bureau of Statistics of the State Department of advance sheets of the statistics of imports from various countries for the first quarter of 1895 as reported to the department by the American consuls, compared with the imports for the same quarter in 1894, are likely to open the eyes of the people as no amount of argument could ever have done.

What do they show? Simply that the pretense of the democratic tariff reformers, as they delight to call themselves, that they were legislating in the interest of the poor man, of the laboring masses of the country, of the oppressed farmer and all that, was merely a delusion and a snare. If any one will take the trouble to examine the statistics of imports under the new schedules he will find that wherever there has been an increase of imports it has been of articles of luxury which have been cheapened by the reduced tariff. But he will look in vain for any indication of an increase in the imports of those staples which are consumed by the masses.

Take, for instance, the statement in the publication made by the Bureau of Statistics just mentioned, that the imports from France for the quarter show an increase of $6,425,768. These figures are so striking, it is said, as to cause comment, and the bureau therefore goes into details. It is found that the imports are chiefly from the Paris consular districts. Many of the items are then given, with the total value of the invoices. There are merinos, cashmeres, and miscellaneous dress goods; silk manufactures; laces, veils, crepes and embroideries; feathers and flowers, artificial and for millinery; gloves; wines; china and glass ware; jewelry and precious stones; buttons and trimmings. The total of these imports from France for the quarter amounts to $17,674,697, an increase over the corresponding quarter of last year, as already stated, of $6,425,768.

So far from such an increase in the imports of the kind enumerated being a benefit to the masses of the people, it could be shown that in most instances it has resulted in crippling similar productive industries at home. And in whose interest? The question answers itself. The rich—those who have incomes to spend for luxuries—are alone benefited. In a word, the tendency of the new tariff is to undermine and destroy home manufactures and to cheapen luxuries. The mechanics and handicraftsmen who are thrown out of work and the poor are left to take care of themselves.

THEY FAIRLY FLEW.—The wharves and banks along the river last Saturday afternoon were lined with people who had gathered to witness the race between the Potter and Telephone on their through run from Portland to Astoria, both billed to leave the former place at 1 o'clock. It was just 2:30 when the Potter passed in front of this place well over to the Washington side, and about 5 minutes later the Telephone poked her bow through the dense smoke close to the Oregon shore. Both steamers were evidently doing their best judging from the great volumes of smoke issuing from their stacks accompanied by a terrible roar which could be heard for several miles. The Potter is said to have reached Astoria just 8 minutes ahead of the Telephone. Deducting from this the 4 minutes the former had in starting, would make the difference between the two boats in running the 100 miles just about 4 minutes. However, this will probably not settle the question as to which is the faster, for both have made better time over the same course on former occasions. As a result of the contest, however, both steamers were obliged to lay over a day or two to "fix" their wheels and otherwise tighten up their shattered parts.

DUEL BETWEEN DOCTORS.—Last Friday in Portland Dr. H. R. Holmes and Dr. Ausplund fought a duel with pistols in the former's office. Both men emptied their pistols at each other at close range, except Ausplund, whose pistol still contained one cartridge when taken from him. Each man received three wounds, none of which are thought will prove fatal, though Dr. Ausplund was shot once through the right lung. The participants are both in the Good Samaritan hospital and their attending physicians think they will recover. The trouble grew out of difficulty which arose in the Portland hospital, where both physicians were members of the medical staff.

A FATAL RIVER COLLISION

The Ocean Wave Runs Down the Yawl Rainier.

John Weatherwax and Ed Wagner Lose Their Lives—How it Happened.

Shortly before 12 o'clock Sunday night the river steamer Ocean Wave, while returning from Ilwaco, with a crowd of seaside excursionists, ran down a sailboat, containing five men, two of whom were drowned. It is said the boat displayed no lights, and it was not until almost under the steamer's bow that it was observed by Captain Whitcomb, who was at the wheel. It was too late to prevent a collision, although an effort was made to back the steamer. John Weatherwax and Edward Wagner were drowned, and Milton Smith, owner of the boat; Harry Brous and Edward Anrys were rescued by the crew from the steamer.

The sailboat was built at Rainier, and its construction completed Saturday night. It had been named in honor of the town, and on Sunday evening the launching of the little craft took place in the presence of a large number of people. Shortly after 8 o'clock the Rainier started down stream, headed for Astoria, where the young men expected to take part in the regatta, and to spend a couple of weeks there. The start was made amid rousing cheers of friends on the river bank, and in a little while the boat passed from view. There was no wind, and in consequence slow headway was made, and to help pass the time away Weatherwax and Wagner, with violin and harmonica, amused their companions. It was after 11 o'clock when Stella, on the Washington side, was sighted, and a light breeze springing up, the sail was made and the little craft headed out into the river.

The Oregonian gives the following story as to how it happened: The channel had hardly been reached when the lights of the Ocean Wave were sighted, but the men in the sailboat did not seem to know whether the steamer was going up or down stream. Three of the occupants of the boat jumped into the river just as the sharp bow of the steamer struck the craft, while the other two, Weatherwax and Wagner, apparently paralyzed with fear, remained in their seat and were not seen again. Captain Whitcomb, who was at the wheel on the Ocean Wave, saw the outlines of the boat but a few feet ahead, and shouting out "What are you trying to do?" signaled for the engines to stop, and just then the crash came. The sail caught for a moment on the bow, and then the boat swung to the starboard side, while the men in the water were loudly shouting for help.

First Officer Gray, who had retired for the night, heard the first alarm, and hastily dressing, was on the lower deck in less than a minute, superintending the lowering of a boat, manned by three of the steamer's crew. Guided by the voices of the men struggling in the water, they soon picked up Brous; a moment after Anrys was rescued, and about 50 feet further on Smith was found greatly exhausted. The three men were taken on the steamer and every attention shown them. Smith was unconscious when taken aboard, and after nearly an hour's work he regained consciousness. The rescued men were provided with dry clothing, and after the excitement had in a measure subsided, they were able to give an account of the accident.

Milton Smith, owner of the boat, after his rescue and resuscitation, said: "We had passed the steamers Potter, Lurline and Gatzert, and I thought that was all the steamers coming up the river for the night. I took the lamp down, and put it under a blanket so that the light would not blind me in sailing the boat. Weatherwax and Wagner were sitting amidship, playing the violin and harmonica for our amusement, and I was near them. The man steering suddenly called out "boat;" and looking under the sail we saw the steamer on top of us. Anrys, Brous and myself jumped into the water, but the other two remained in the boat when the steamer struck it. I cannot attach any blame to the officers of the Ocean Wave for the accident."

Anrys stated that he, Smith and Brous dived clear of the smallboat just as the bow of the steamer struck them. Weatherwax and Wagner, however, seemed paralyzed with fear and took the whole brunt of the terrific shock. All three of the survivors drifted down past the wheel, and but for the engines stopping just at the moment they did, not of the five men would have been saved. Smith received a slight bruise from one of the buckets of the wheel.

Captain Wes Whitcomb, who was at the wheel at the time of the collision, said: "There was positively nothing on the surface of the river to acquaint me with the presence of another craft. I was closely following the channel, the night being extremely dark, the smoke hanging even lower than usual. The first intimation I had of the small boat being near me was when her hull loomed out of the darkness right athwart our course, and not 20 feet from the bow of the Ocean Wave. I at once sent bells below to stop and go astern at full speed, but as well try to stop a mountain avalanche as to take headway off the Ocean Wave in that distance. First Officer Gray was asleep in the texas, but before I could call him he was on deck, half dressed, and attending to the lowering of the lifeboat. The collision is solely the result of the young men who manned the light built boat they had constructed, being entirely ignorant of the rules of navigation. Aside from showing no light on their own craft, they were unable to tell from the green and red starboard and port lights on the Ocean Wave in what direction the steamer was going. It would appear almost rash that people knowing so little of what constitutes the handling of even a small boat should attempt a night trip on the river."

[The statement that the young men were inexperienced boatmen is incorrect. We are informed that all but one of them have been engaged in the fishing business, and consequently must be more or less familiar with the rules of navigation. It would seem from the published reports that no one was really to blame for the deplorable and sad catastrophe. An effort was made Monday to recover the bodies of the two that were drowned, but without being successful.—ED.]

Now, therefore, by virtue of said warrant, I will, on Saturday, the 21st day of September, A. D. 1895, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M., at the front door of the County Courthouse, in the City of St. Helens, Columbia County, State of Oregon, sell at public auction, subject to redemption, the above-described property, to satisfy said tax and costs.

CHARLES F. DOAN,
Sheriff and Tax Collector for Columbia County, Oregon.

Dated this 22nd day of August, 1895.

Reader, did you ever take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR, the "KING OF LIVER MEDICINES?" Everybody needs take a liver remedy. It is a sluggish or diseased liver that impairs digestion and causes constipation, when the waste that should be carried off remains in the body and poisons the whole system. That dull, heavy feeling is due to a torpid liver. Biliousness, Headache, Malaria and Indigestion are all liver diseases. Keep the liver active by an occasional dose of Simmons Liver Regulator and you'll get rid of these troubles, and give tone to the whole system. For a laxative Simmons Liver Regulator is BETTER THAN PILLS. It does not gripe, nor weaken, but greatly refreshes and strengthens.

Every package has the Red Z stamp on the wrapper. J. H. Zeilin & Co., Philadelphia.
