ST. HELENS, OREGON, NOV. 22.

It now seems probable that prize-fighting will be stamped out of civilization which has apparently advanced beyond that degree of brutality. Football, the twin sister to the prizefight, may survive a little longer, but it is only a matter of time when it, too, will be obliterated, to the betterment of humanity.

Man can always talk best about that which they understand the best; but those who understand a subject best can not always talk the best about it. Neither Washington, Napoleon nor Grant could have made a stump speech about war. Oliver Goldsmith is said to have written like an angel and to have talked like a parrot.

The time is drawing near, indeed has already arrived, when the political bee has begun to buzz. It is, however, amusing to note the list of candidates produced for congressmen from Oregon's two districts from day to day, in the Oregonian. Great papers have great imaginations and the Oregonian is no exception to the rule. But to those who know some of the parties named by that paper for congress from time to time it is really laughable if not ridiculous to see their names put forward amid so much gush, and when the whole matter is boiled down but one thing remains, and that is that Oregon's great daily is hard pressed for news.

A NEWSPAPER has, we believe, a perfect right to criticize the public acts of an official, when in the judgment of the editor the said official has erred willfully or in judgment. But such criticisms should be made to the point, and not by a lot of interrogations, which are not direct and not explained. A public official exercises good judgment in paying no attention to insinuations, though they may be annoying, for it may be said a newspaper too cowardly to back up its implications by giving all the facts is not worthy of notice and carries with it no weight of evidence. While it may be the privilege of a newspaper to criticize the official acts of public servants it has neither the moral or legal right to misrepresent or mislead the public by insinuations, a thing which honest journalism has decried in all ages. The right to criticize rests upon the facts presented to substantiate the assertion.

The rate war now going on between the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company and the Southern Pacific Company, between Portland and San Francisco, in which the rate by steamer is $5 first class and $2.50 second class, and by rail $10 and $5 first and second class respectively, tends to some extent to work a hardship on the business interests of the Northwest. The great crowds of people going to San Francisco "just for a trip" by reason of this reduced rate, takes thousands of dollars out of the state for which nothing comes back in return. It cannot be denied that people have the right to travel and that the transportation lines have a right to make a cheap rate, but in doing so the corporations cripple themselves and the people let go their surplus without getting anything in return. Only those who have business to attend to in San Francisco, who are few, profit by the rate war.

NOTWITHSTANDING the general complaints of the scarcity of money during the past year the percentage of taxes on the delinquent roll for 1894, as returned by Sheriff Doan, is much less than it ever has been in the history of the county. Out of over $38,000 in taxes due the county on the roll of 1894 only about $14,000 remain unpaid. The property against which this amount stands was bid in by the county at the recent sheriff's sale, most or all of which will be redeemed within the two-year limit provided by law for that purpose. The sheriff has proceeded cautiously in the levy and collection of taxes, so that all possibilities of doubt as to the legality of the mode of procedure is set at rest. There is a law which provides when and how taxes may be collected, and when properly enforced, as has been the case this year, county revenues will be collected up closely, which means a diminishing of the county's indebtedness. Enforcement of the law is the only safe method of doing business for the public. The same mode of procedure as applied by the sheriff this year would enable the county to receive several thousand dollars of taxes which have been going delinquent for several years, and should, by all means, be collected and placed to the credit of the county.

NEXT Thursday has been set apart by the president of the United States and by the governor of this state as a day of general thanksgiving and pleasure. It is first in order for us to realize that we have something to be thankful for and then proceed to be thankful. Notwithstanding the stagnation and depression in many lines of business in this country and apparent gloom in many social lines, yet as a nation we have many things for which to be indeed thankful, especially so when compared with the condition of the masses in other lands. It may be said that times are hard and that some degree of actual suffering exists in certain portions of our country, but while this is true it is also true we should not lose sight of the fact that our liberal form of government affords opportunities which are not found in any other part of the world, and the suffering and want of the comparatively few, while deeply deplored, is as nothing compared with the Old World. Next Thursday, as has been the custom for many years, has been set apart as a legal holiday that the people may meet in their various places of worship and in the homes and give thanks to Almighty God for the many blessings they enjoy by reason of the great plan of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe. On that day let all our people lay aside, for a time, the cares of life and mingle together in the acknowledgment of the many blessings bestowed upon the American people.

FARM NOTES.

The farm poultry, which, during the summer and thus far in the season have had little care, because with their free range they have been able to scratch for themselves, must now have some attention if they are to pay for their keeping during the winter.

Eggs and good plump fowls for the table generally bring a higher price in the market in the winter than at any other time of the year. The wise farmer takes advantage of this better market by being prepared for it.

Aside from poultry, there are four classes of domestic animals which enter largely into the commerce of the world. These, as you all know, are cattle, horses, sheep and swine. The question arises why of all the animals of the kingdom these four should have survived among all others. I do not ask why these four were selected, but why they have survived because, as a matter of fact, many others were selected in times past for domestication but the attempt for the most part has been abandoned because the four named are the most suited, generally speaking. Perhaps the reason why these four have survived among all others may be illustrated by reference to the elephant. Professor Shaler in an admirable article in the July Scribner for 1894, points out, that the elephant is the most easily tamed of all our wild animals and possesses marvelous intelligence. It is stated for example, that wild elephants have been captured and tamed and taught to lay up railroad ties in piles, first laying a row one way and then the other.

There is an old saying to the effect that necessity is the mother of invention. But it is not true; in reality, says Farm News, invention is the mother of necessity. Today a harvesting machine is an absolute necessity to every wheat grower; fifty years ago a cradle and a sickle enabled him to meet the demands of the market. Fifty years ago the tallow candle made light enough for the ordinary house; today a much better light is a necessity. And it is the same way with all labor-saving machines. Some one has said that they are not labor saving but labor-making machines. There is a great deal of twaddle going the rounds about a "horseless age" upon which we are supposed to be entering because of the advent of the bicycle and the application of electricity to locomotion. The same alarm was raised upon the appearance of the steam engine, but what has been the result? Steam transportation has created a demand for horses such as the world could never have known under other circumstances. And it will be the same way with the more recent inventions for transportation. Man's noble friend, the horse will not be pushed into obscurity for several generations yet, and the bicycle and electrical carriages will only bring to him a better appreciation. Farmers will soon find a market for good horses, at better prices than have prevailed for the past few years.

Looked at as a machine, an animal is a combined boiler and engine. The fuel is represented by the food which it eats, the bones represent the levers, pulleys and iron work of the engine, and the muscles may be likened to the steam of the engine, as they transmit the power. Man may increase his own productive power, therefore, by the use of other animals or by the use of mechanical appliances, such as steam engines. The great advances made in civilization in recent times have been largely due to the increased use of stored up carbon through coal mines and gas and oil wells. Remember that coal oil and gas are products of plant growth. The reason that a man who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before is a benefactor to his race is due to the fact that twice as much energy is being stored up for the use of mankind through the fixation of carbon. At present, as before indicated, we are living, to a great extent, off from fossilized carbon in the shape of coal, oil and gas, but when these sources of carbon are exhausted mankind will be dependent entirely upon the efforts of the farmer, and the number of the people that it will be possible for the globe to maintain will depend upon the tillers of the soil.

Peculiar Mental Condition.
Salem, says the Statesman, has a very peculiar case of mental derangement. For about two months one of its citizens, an old and highly respected German, has suffered from affection of the brain which causes him a total loss of memory in certain respects, while his faculties in all other ways seem entirely unimpaired. A curious feature of the ailment is that he is fully conscious of it and it worries him greatly. He was considerable of a reader, but now he takes up a book or paper and does not know one letter from another. If asked to write his name he will do so but in two minutes if the signature is shown him he cannot tell what it is. He can transact business for the time being with knowledge and accuracy, but in a short time he forgets and takes his exercise regularly, and cannot understand the nature of his affliction. It is an interesting case for pathologists. Some of Salem's physicians and one in Portland have been studying it, but have come to no conclusion about it.

Battle With a Steer.
D. Pitts, of Kirby, had a battle with a steer the other day. Mr. Pitts entered the corral where the steer was and attempted to lasso the animal. The steer made a rush for him and struck him with one horn, tearing through his clothing, and slightly cutting through the skin for about thirteen inches across the abdomen. Mr. Pitts grabbed the steer by one of its horns which saved his life. The steer, being thoroughly aroused, began to thrash over the yard, while he held on to the horns for his life. It seemed a hopeless case for him, for to let loose meant instant death. Mrs. Pitts, however, came to the rescue, and with a club, tried to beat the steer so that he would cease, but not until the gate was opened by Hector Egger, and the rest of the cattle run out, did he quit, and Mr. Pitts, letting go, he ran out with the other cattle. It was a desperate fight for life, and had it not been for plucky Mrs. Pitts, her husband would undoubtedly have been killed.

INSURANCE COMPANY FAILS

Caused by the Suspension of a Banking Company.

Two of Salem's Leading Institutions in the Hands of Receivers and Another Destroyed by Fire.

Salem has been called upon, says the Statesman, to witness the closing of one of its financial institutions and the consequent suspension of one of its business enterprises through the lack of ready money incident to the stringency of finances and the difficulty of making collections, but yet there is nothing in the news which goes out today to arouse alarm in relation to the strength, solidity and prosperity of Salem business institutions individually and collectively.

The Williams & England Banking company failed to open its doors on Thursday morning of last week and the following notice was posted on the door, signed by H. F. McNary, the cashier:

"Having reason to expect unusual demands from depositors and in order to treat all creditors fairly and equitably this bank is closed for the present. It is my opinion that all depositors will be paid in full."

To the general public this was a great surprise but to many it was expected, as it was well known Wednesday evening that there was some financial nervousness about the institution. Rumors that the bank had failed were flying thick and fast, but nothing definite could be learned for the time being.

From those connected with the bank it is learned that the liabilities amount to about $130,000 and the assets will foot up in the neighborhood of $275,000.

The bank was incorporated in December, 1889, the articles of incorporation being made by George Williams, William England and J. A. Baker. The capital stock was placed at $300,000 divided into shares of $100 each. Besides the above named gentlemen some other stockholders are F. C. Baker, Richard and Emmett Williams of Portland, Dr. J. A. Richardson, Hugh P. McNary and Finley Perrine. Mr. McNary having been cashier since the organization of the institution. Major Williams, president of the banking company, its heaviest stockholder and also its heaviest debtor upon personal account, has turned over every particle of his property, including the home in which his family live, to the bank and he has nothing left but his library and such of his property as may remain after settlement.

The State Insurance Company.
As a sequel to the closing of the bank the following notice was posted on the door of the State Insurance, signed by Edmond C. Giltner, secretary and manager:

"Owing to the closing of the Williams & England Banking company's bank in which the funds are kept, and to lack of available funds to meet claims now becoming due, and in order to protect the interests of policyholders and stockholders, the State Insurance company will suspend business and ask the appointment of a receiver."

The State Insurance company has been one of the prominent factors in Salem business for some years and was supposed to be entirely solid and free from danger. Its suspension is a serious loss, not only here, says the Statesman, where the home office employed a large force of clerks, but all over this state, Washington and Idaho. It is estimated that from 200 to 250 persons are thus thrown out of employment, not all under salary from the company, but all finding employment in its work, consequently the loss will be widespread.

Notwithstanding the fact that business depression has made the suspension necessary, it is but just to the present management to state that the company is $30,000 less in debt than when the reorganization took place a year ago and Mr. Giltner became manager.

The assets of the company are $375,000, with liabilities, as regards policy holders, of $175,000. The assets consist of $22,000 loaned out in the state of Washington on securities approved by the treasurer of state, consequently they are good; city and farm real estate, mortgage loans, collateral loans and premium notes. The real estate is said to be of the very best character, including their splendid corner and three-story brick block in Salem, and in ordinary times of prosperity would be very valuable. Their paper is choice, but the ability to realize at present upon any securities is not great.

The necessity for ready funds and a constant receipt of large amounts and a good bank account will be better realized when the expenditures are known. For the month of October the total expenses, including losses, footed up $18,716, and the running expenses alone were $10,711. The capital stock is $100,000 and it is all paid up.

There is much sympathy for Mr. Giltner, who went into the company with all his savings and gave it his young energy and push, only to find himself now confronted by a condition that may leave him without means. He has been appointed receiver for the company, however, and will use every effort in his power to see that creditors are protected to the cent, and those who know him best have implicit confidence that he will do it.

Salem Woolen Mills Burned.
Salem, Nov. 18.—Oregon today sustained the loss of an important manufacturing establishment in the burning of the Thomas Kay woolen mills. The fire was discovered in the dryhouse by the nightwatch at 5:15 A. M., and subsequent events proved false against saving the concern. The main building and contents were destroyed. The building and contents were a system of waterworks, which was operated by the same wheel that propels the machinery. Water had been turned on the wheel for the day's run, and when the fire was discovered the flames shut off access to the wheel, thus preventing the coupling of power to the water system. Salem has no fire alarm system.

There was sufficient steam up for the nightwatch to give the distress signal by means of the whistle. The whistle is blown every morning at 5:30 o'clock, and, as it was near that hour, the extra blowing attracted the attention of but few people. The city fire department headquarters were 11 blocks away, and much time was lost by the nightwatch in going to the mills' office to reach the fire department by telephone, and it was about 30 minutes from the discovery of the fire before the engine was on the ground.

The hose was used to good effect until fuel gave out, then, steam being exhausted, the flames continued their destructive work while the fire department was hunting coal. Hose was attached to a hydrant of the city works, but the force was insufficient for effective work. The floors were saturated with oil from the wool, and the flames mocked the efforts to subdue them. The loss is fully $50,000, and a detailed estimate may prove it to be much more. The insurance is $30,000.
