ST. HELENS, OREGON, JULY 3.

MCKINLEY TALKS.

The committee appointed by the national convention to notify William McKinley of his nomination performed their duty Monday. After Chairman Thurston had imparted to the nominee the information for which he was sent, Major McKinley responded, in part, as follows: "Great are the issues involved in the coming election and eager and earnest the people for their right determination. Our domestic trade must be won back and our idle workmen employed in gainful occupations at American wages. Our home market must be restored to its proud rank of first in the world, and our foreign trade, so precipitately cut off by adverse national legislation, reopened on fair and equitable terms for our surplus agricultural and manufacturing products."

"Protection and reciprocity, twin measures of a true American policy, should again command the earnest encouragement of the government at Washington. Public confidence must be restored and the skill, the energy and the capital of our country find ample employment at home, sustained, encouraged and defended against the unequal competition and serious disadvantage with which they are now contending. The government of the United States must raise enough money to meet both its current expenses and increasing needs. Its revenues should be so raised as to protect the material interests of our people with the slightest possible drain upon their resources and to maintain that high standard of civilization which has distinguished our country for more than a century of its existence."

"The income of the government, I repeat, should equal its necessary and proper expenditures. A failure to pursue this policy has compelled the government to borrow money in a time of peace to sustain its credit and pay its daily expenses. This policy should be revised, and that, too, as speedily as possible. It must be apparent to all, regardless of past parties or affiliations, that it is our paramount duty to provide adequate revenue for the expenditures of the government, economically and prudently administered. The republican party has heretofore done this, and I confidently believe it will do it in the future, when the party again is entrusted with power in the executive and legislative branches of our government. The national credit which has thus far resisted every assault upon it must and will be upheld and strengthened."

"If sufficient revenues are provided for the support of our government, there will be no necessity for borrowing money and increasing the public debt. The complaint of the people is not against the administration for borrowing money and issuing bonds to preserve the credit of the country, but against the ruinous policy which has made this necessary. It is but an incident, and a necessary one, to the policy which has been inaugurated. The inevitable effect of such a policy is seen in the deficiency of the United States treasury, except as it is replenished by loans, and the distress of the people who are suffering because of the scant demand for either labor or the products of their labor. Here is the fundamental trouble, the remedy for which is republican opportunity and duty. During all these years of republican control following resumption there was a steady reduction of the public debt, while the gold reserve was sacredly maintained, and our currency and credit preserved without depreciation, taint or suspicion."

A PRAYER was offered at the opening of the republican national convention by Rabbi Saale. Among other things he prayed as follows: "O, kindle in the hearts of our generation the altar-flame of devotion to the high aims that inspired the minds of the founders of our republic, and above all illumined and immortalized the life of our immortalized and noblest American citizen, and of the sacred obligations that should attend it, so that we may grow from day to day in the beauty of civic virtue, and our beloved land, from hundred harbored Maine to the vine-clad hills of the Golden Gate, from ice-bound North to the warm and sunny South, may go from strength to strength until it achieves its destiny to become the fixed and shining mark for every bark bound for the haven of light and liberty." It need not be added that the reverend gentleman was every inch an American, striving to uphold American principles.

This position of McKinley upon the financial question should cut but little figure in the contest among republicans. It is sufficient to know at this point that he is a protectionist, and upon that proposition alone should receive the support of every republican. Adjustment of our tariff laws as outlined by the republican platform and advocated at all times by the present nominee, will go far toward regulating finances in this country. What the people want first is an opportunity to save some of the money already in existence. What do we profit if we had four times as much money in existence if the wheels of the factory and the farm are not in operation to keep the money in circulation? We want an opportunity to earn money, and that opportunity is not offered through the operation of the Wilson free trade law. More money is needed to carry on business with, but we must first and foremost enact a tariff law which will create that business. A vote for McKinley is a vote in that direction.

The exports of sugar from Cuba during the current crop year, now nearly at an end, will be only about one-fifth of the usual amount. After this stock is exhausted the price is liable to advance, which means that the people of the United States will have to pay more for an article of common use, or get along with less of it. And yet the Cleveland administration holds that we have not sufficient interest in the Cuban war to justify intervention on our part.

It has always seemed to me that it was infinitely better that the farmer should have a market at home, a market at his very door, than to be compelled to seek a market in distant countries and among distant populations. As long as there is a demand at home it is better than to seek consumers abroad, and that the home demand is safer, more reliable and more profitable than any foreign market can possibly be. American buyers are the best in the world.—Hon. William McKinley.

It is not to be wondered at that brewers are able to rule caucuses and control civic elections, when it is known that their annual sales since 1876 have increased from $8,500,000 to $36,000,000.

Note the division of sentiment just before the Chicago convention and compare the scene with that prior to the republican convention at St. Louis.

THE BATTLE-SHIP OREGON.

Some Interesting Statistics Regarding Details of Her Construction.

Generally speaking, all that the public knows of an immense floating fortress like the United States war vessel Oregon is that she is 348 feet in length, and has a displacement of 10,000 tons, and that the contract price to the government was $3,228,000, but few stop to consider the enormous totals that are involved in the construction of such a monster. The San Francisco Call says: "The contractors, who have to close their figures on the cost of such a vessel, keep account of every item, however small, and from this data the absolute cost of them can be quickly estimated. From these figures an accurate and intelligent idea of the immensity of such a job, and an examination of these results, which are called the 'units of the Oregon,' will prove interesting reading."

"First of all is the cost of labor, and a close computation shows that there were 3,288,000 hours spent in building the great ship, and that 328,800 days of ten hours each, were consumed in her construction. No less an amount than 10,175,593 pounds of construction steel was used, and in addition 607,100 pounds of brass, 916,960 pounds of wrought-iron and $12,712 pounds of cast-iron was used. It took 544,500 pounds of rivets to fasten all her plates together, and 57,000 pounds of copper pipe were used for her steam conductors. The Oregon is an iron-clad, but the large quantity of 680,000 feet of lumber had to be used to finish her flooring and cabins, and incidentally 500,000 feet of common lumber was consumed for scaffolding, blocking, staking, etc."

"The sides of the Oregon are additionally protected by coffer-dams filled with cellulose, and of this material 128,000 pounds were used. If all of her big guns were fired at one time, the shots would weigh, all together, 6300 pounds. Her engines, of which there are 106, develop a power of 11,000 horse, and to rush her through the water at 17 knots the propeller must make 130 revolutions each minute. "The Oregon will have four great searchlights, which will make everything visible within a radius of five miles, and each will project a glare equal to 40,000 candle-power. Her keel was laid in November, 1891, but owing to the delay in furnishing the plates, the constructor's trial did not take place until August, 1894. The final trial trip occurred in May, 1896. She will be turned over to the government, fully equipped for war, on next Monday, the 6th day of July."

Senator Teller's Chances.

CHICAGO, June 30.—Delegates who have arrived generally appear adverse to discussing the probability that Senator Teller will cut any figure in the democratic convention. The senator has a number of friends among the silver delegates who have already arrived, and among them are some who would not be adverse to his nomination for president. They feel, however, that the conditions are not ripe for the springing of his name, and say it would be opposed to both the interests of Teller and the silver cause to bring him to the front at this time, if at all. There are also a number of silver republicans and populists in the city, who are devoting themselves more to watching the course of events than to any active work. The populists who are here say openly that Teller is the only man the democrats can name that they will endorse. Silver republicans are not so pronounced. They put the matter less pointedly by saying that Teller is the only man whose nomination would insure the western states to the democratic ticket. It is not the purpose of the senator's friends to have him placed in nomination as others will be. This course, they consider, will be in bad form, and contrary to Mr. Teller's wishes. Their plan is not to make an aggressive campaign, but simply to be on the ground to answer questions and to take advantage of any opportunity that may offer.

Congressman Shafer, of Colorado, was asked today to define the claims of the Teller men, and replied: "Senator Teller is not a candidate in the sense of seeking the nomination as a member of the democratic party could be. The friends of the senator are simply trying to impress upon the democrats the enormous advantage there would be in uniting upon Teller, who could solidify all the bimetallic forces. "There is no question that the one man above all others whose name is a synonym for bimetalism is Teller. His speeches upon the silver question constitute a series of treatises upon political economy which have given him the rank of the ablest statesman in the United States on that subject."

FOURTEEN KINDS OF CAKE.

Haller, a famous Swiss scientist of the eighteenth century, was once well rewarded for his politeness to a fellow traveler. Some scientists find it hard to take an interest in anything except their own specialities. It was not so with Haller. His fellow traveler was a good woman from Bern. The conversation fell naturally upon the commodity for which Bern is noted—cakes.

The Bernese dame said with pride that she could make 14 kinds of cakes. What was her surprise and delight when Haller asked her how she made them? She eagerly began a recital, with copious explanations, of those 14 recipes, and she had a good listener.

Perhaps Haller regretted his rash question, but he did not show it. He listened patiently and smilingly to the end, and he and the Bernese woman parted very good friends, though he had hardly spoken a word. It is safe to say that in all his scientific researches he had not learned so much about the combination of butter and sugar and eggs.

Some time afterward he was elected to an important political office. From some quarters he received an unexpected number of votes. Then he found out that his Bernese cake-making friend had been so impressed with the intelligence and ability of her fellow traveler that when she heard he was running for office she gave her relatives, friends and acquaintances no peace until she had secured their promise to vote for him.—Youth's Companion.

New Application of the Proverb.

A little 5-year-old boy who had been taught by his mother to place an occasional penny in the missionary barrel with the intention of passing it to the Sunday school superintendent on a specific day had many small deposits and was ready for the eventual date.

It is customary on such occasions for the little ones to have a verse to repeat as they pass in the little barrel which is to aid in educating the heathen. The mother of the little boy had taught him to repeat the Bible verse, "The Lord loveth the cheerful giver." The little fellow had mastered it and was ready for the occasion. An older brother, somewhat of a wag, managed to convince the little fellow that the verse he had learned was too common and that all the other children would have that verse, so he had better learn another one. The little fellow dropped the first verse and took up with the substitute proposed by his wicked brother, and when he approached the superintendent of the Sunday school, with his little barrel of pennies, he accompanied the gift by the following verse: "A fool and his money are soon parted." Imagine the face of the superintendent! The little boy thought he had performed his duty.—Boston Budget.
