Martha Washington at Valley Forge. The part which Martha Washington played at Valley Forge has, indeed, seldom received the credit which it deserves as an example of the virtues of the women of the revolution. No soldier's wife was more faithful to her husband in the midst of his perils and hardships than simple-hearted Marths of the colonies. She visited the sick and suffering in their huts; she braved the dangers of the smallpox; she patch arbiter. ed trousers, knitted socks and made shirts for the men, and his "dear Patsy," as the big general used to call his plump and pleasant little wife, kept the ladies of the camp busy, when they called on her at the stone house, sewing for the soldiers .- William Perrine, in Ladies' Home Journal.
