AUGUST 23, 1901.

Reports from every direction say the grain yield is very good. The price of wheat, however, is too low at present, and the conditions of the market seem to indicate a raise. The price of corn is exceptionally heavy and Eastern journals say last year's prices will prevail, which mean much money for the grower.

It is not every year the farmer has an opportunity to make money on his fruit, but he will do so this year, which does not sell it too soon and thus let some other person make the money. It is too bad the crop is light, but that is all the more reason for exercising care to get out of it all there is in it, both in caring for the fruit and in price.

The Yankee is proverbially thrifty, though no one would suspect that New Hampshire legislators would refuse to appropriate $300 to purchase the farm on which Daniel Webster was born to save it from desecration. They did refuse, and the trees under which the great logician played have been sold alone for $2800 and will be cut into matches.

In South Dakota lately, when the voters made an attempt to apply the referendum provision to the state constitution, they failed. Five per cent of the voters, by signing a petition within ninety days, may require that any law passed by the legislature shall be submitted to the people. On the first attempt to secure the requisite number of signers the time limit expired, but only four per cent of the voters had been enlisted. Hence the referendum has not been ordered.

Boycott the trusts! That's the way to drive them out of business. Boycott the steel trust. Boycott the tobacco trust—chew the rag. Quit the sugar trust—don't get sweet on anybody male or female. Boycott the match trust—don't get married. Quit the whisky trust—quit the beer trust and the oil trust. Quit the oil trust—the world will be hot enough to make up for any chilliness in this one.

After the manner of the governor of Missouri for breaking the drought, the governor of Pennsylvania might proclaim a special day of prayer for breaking the steel workers' strike. Yet the latter may be skeptical and answer as did Hotspur to the Welsh soothsayer chieftain in the Shakespearean play: "I can call spirits from the vasty deep," asserted the Welshman. Hotspur retorted: "Yea, and so can I, and so can any man, but will they come when called?"

Of one of the "abandoned farms" of Massachusetts, a farmer from Long Island who knows something about farming, has this year planted thirty-seven acres with potatoes, from which he has now gathered a crop of from 125 to 150 bushels per acre, disposing of the same in Worcester at from $4.50 to $5.00 per barrel. At the lowest figure he will receive over $10,000 for the crop, or at least twenty times the amount he paid for the land. The latest estimate of the amount in gold in the bank and in the hands of the people was $830,497,296. Assuming this estimate to be correct, there was in the United States at the close of the last year gold coin to the amount of $1,124,729,291. It thus appears that a nation of 70,000,000 people has in its treasury and in circulation more than one-fourth of the world's stock of gold. Of course, estimates of the amount of gold in the several countries and of the amount in the hands of the people in this country can only approximate correctness. Still, for purposes of the comparison of the financial condition of the several countries, they serve fairly well. The United States possesses more than one-fourth of the world's stock of gold and about one-twentieth of the estimated population of the world. This fact has the greater significance since gold has become the basis of all kinds of currency in the leading commercial nations. Should there ever again be a general demand for gold for currency, the United States, of all nations, would be in the best condition to stand the strain. The Bank of France is second to the United States only in its store of gold, its reserves being $478,238,820. The bank of Russia contains $345,408,144, the Bank of Austria-Hungary $190,414,120, the Bank of England $183,330,681, and the Bank of Germany $188,383,434.

This devil's most industrious and efficient assistant here on top of this earth is the gossip. Whenever time hangs heavily on her hands she takes a hitch in the slack of her mother-hubbard gown, grabs her sun-bonnet and goes out to some of the neighbors to do an autopsy on the latest scandal or to dramatize the character of some hapless sister or brother, of whom she is envious or jealous. A woman who indulges in the vice of gossiping until it becomes habitual will not infrequently neglect her home and personal affairs to gratify the passion to gad about and say mean things of her sisters. Women and wolves of all God's creatures are the only animals to read and devour their own kind. The gossip is actuated by the instincts and impulses of the cowardly miscreant who lies in ambush and shoots his victim in the back. The one takes the life of his brother, the other destroys the reputation of her sister. Both are lurking assassins and will be held to the same accountability in the hereafter. The masculine gossip is the degenerate thing who hangs on the street corners and comments on the women and young girls who pass by. Of all the contemptible, despicable creatures that cumber the earth he is the scabbed chief. No woman, no matter how good, how responsible or how pure, is immune from the dribblings of his foul tongue. And the better the man or the more prominent in society, if they can catch up some excuse to talk slanderously of him the more they roll it around their tongues as some choice morsel. Gossiping and peddling of scandal are vices engendered by envy and malice, yet many professed Christians are guilty of them. Gossip has its votaries in the church as well as out, in the mansion and shack, in the city or village. But it thrives best and has its stronghold in the small town, where everybody knows everybody's business. This town has its gossips and they work early and late, assailing the reputation of one and that one, and many of them unkindful of the fact that they are not like the good and lowly Samaritans themselves. Slanders appear said truly that men's deeds return unto them, and he includes the deeds of women, too. Therefore fear to assail the good name of anyone lest in return you be said of you and yours. Forbearing gossip, its an awful habit—a soul wrecking vice.

The development of our county and city is a question which should interest and call out the energy of every business man in town. In our county we have abundant streams and numerous other natural opportunities, which, if properly harnessed, would carry our county to be distributed among our people, hundreds of thousands of dollars annually. We have the opportunities, which, if utilized, would afford us the means of making hundreds of thousands of dollars in other localities, and our money goes away from home for those articles and never returns. We could make these articles, many of them, here, employing our own workers and inducing others to come. This would vastly increase every business here, and everybody knows it. Why don't we do it? The reason is plain. We get to making money along some one line, and each sticks right to his own business and forgets that the general welfare needs to be thought of, or we go down, or being down, we stay down. This county, owing to many factors that have been quietly at work for her good, begins to feel a throb of new life, and when a few more of our people who have the power to pump new blood into her veins get out of their ruts and see that it pays big dividends to set the wheels of other industries rolling, there will be plenty of trade for traders and hard times will be limited to professional hard timers. A few determined, unconquerable spirits can make the desert blossom like the rose and build cities in wildernesses. Columbia county is neither a desert nor a wilderness.

Tax newspapers of this country have about finished destroying the wheat and corn crops, and the true situation of affairs is beginning to develop. Actions of this kind are new as long as people have been led to believe and believe in all kinds, including lumber, is showing the effects of a better feeling. In the white pine country trade during the past week has been good, although there has been some falling off in orders, naturally expected at the time of the year when the demand for lumber is low. However, the demand for lumber is good in most markets as it ever is at this time of the year, and the demand in some localities is ahead of that of former years. The mills at Minneapolis and at other points along the Mississippi river have been receiving orders as rapidly as they can take care of them, especially considering the condition of their stock. Many items are short or entirely out of stock, and in filling orders a considerable amount of substitution has taken place. Other orders are being filled with green lumber and manufacturers are willing there should be something of a let-up in the demand in order that they may get their stocks in better shape for the large fall trade they expect after the crops are out of the way.—Mississippi Valley Lumberman.

One is struggling for justice, another is fleeing from it. One man is saving money to buy a house, and another is trying to sell his for less than it cost him to build it. One man is spending his time making his girl to the theater and sending her flowers, with the hope of some day making her his wife, while his neighbor is spending what gold he earns in trying to get a divorce. One man bewails the fate that compels him to work at a desk indoors, while one who is outdoors thinks he would be happy if his work was inside. The man who is in business hopes for the time when he can retire, while another is struggling to get into business. The farmer hopes for the time when he can give up the farm and move to town, while every man in town dreams of a happy time to come when he can own a farm with a big farm bell at the kitchen door, and plenty of healthy, outdoor work to do.

How can W. Fulton, of Astoria, who has been told to appear before the courts in the interests of the mill in their protest against the granting of a franchise to the Wheeler Lumber Company for the exclusive use and monopoly of the Nehalem river and its tributaries, is using some very effective sections of law in regard to this matter. We invite the attention of our readers who are interested in the matter to an article in this issue in regard to the matter.

Public Lands.

There are yet 1,100,000,000 acres of surveyed public lands, not including Alaska, open to entry and settlement. This is an amount about 600 times that already taken up under the public land laws, and is equivalent to 7,000,000 farms of 160 acres each. Much of these lands is not valuable for agricultural purposes. It includes mountains and deserts, large portions of which are practically uninhabitable. Yet there are other portions, constituting in the aggregate a great area that, though inferior to lands not taken, are susceptible of conversion into homesteads for hundreds of thousands of settlers.

Years ago many people supposed that about all the public land worth anything had been taken up, and yet the records of the land office show that more lands were sold under the homestead act last year than in any previous year except 1890, the total for 1900 being 8,478,408 acres, or about 53,000 quarter sections. The reason for this is that as land becomes scarcer the mountains and along the edges of arid areas. They find good claims in timbered regions of only moderate elevation, and along streams where advantage can be taken of irrigation. Many have learned that they do not need to depend upon grain crops principally. Livestock of all kinds in high, and with a patch of fertile cleared land, and good outside range, a settler can soon get ahead and live at comparative ease.

A large fraction of the total of such lands lies in Oregon, and it may be that the best of the homesteaders will find no available government land in this state.

The Eagle has for sale, cheap, a job assortment of complimentary season tickets to various state fairs, street carnivals, etc. In exchange for these complimentary, mind you, for it says so, complimentary, you get each ticket) the paper is presumed to do about a thousand dollars worth of advertising. It is needless to say that the greater portion of these tickets are unpaid for and are likely to remain so. They cannot be returned, and do not expect to see them again. If you have anything that can be of no possible interest to the majority of our readers.—Milton Eagle.

The flax company are distributing a good deal of money around this section of the county. The flax crop is principal, and a large crew of men at work at the mill, and also a crew of men and women at work in the field spreading flax that has been threshed. They have installed a new kind of a threshing machine, which consists of smooth rollers, running together in such a way that the flax and more of it than the one employed last season. A large amount of flax has been delivered, and there is more yet to come. Several large stacks of straw have been made near the mill, the large building is piled full.—Scienc News.

Seeds Like George Sanford.

A Kansas periodical that calls itself "Appeal to Reason" thus characterizes an Oregon newspaper: "One of those flunky lickspittles of capitalism, that laws for railroad passes and little advantages in other corporation table-sweepings, editorially decry the private ownership of the postal system of the nation. His corporation owners want this, hence this public enemy, this dough-faced lick-spittle for corporations, expresses his opposition to the public and the government. And in the same article the flunky says is not in favor of private monopoly. Such a flunky lickspittle for capitalism do not influence any but party bigots, and they don't think, anyhow. How the corporations must smile as they read the fawning maudlin of such sycophantic servile flunkies." And this is the sample of the Kansas man's "appeal to reason."—The Oregonian.

Sanford, once editor of the News, certainly acquired his journalistic training under the tutelage of the editor of "Appeal to Reason." Their "maudlin" are an exact prototype, one of the other. Sanford met his finish by the pursuit of such methods in journalism, and the end for the other fellow is the asylum.

Question Answered.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never flunked, and nothing else for indigestion or biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of appendicitis, nervous prostration or heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system, stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headache and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower. It liquid met, to make you satisfied that there is nothing better matter with you. Get Green's Prize Almanac.

Speaks of Newspapers.

Judge Williams, of Portland, recently delivered a lengthy speech on general topics before the summer school at Newport, among other things, saying: "Newspapers are more numerous and more ably conducted now than ever before and wield an incalculable influence upon the thoughts and actions of men. They are winged messengers of intelligence, the avenues of knowledge to the people, the searchlights of the political world, but then the moral influence is not what it might be or what it ought to be."

He deplores the publication of vice and crime as demoralizing, and deprecates the indiscriminate abuse of public men and officials.

"Many people dependent upon the newspaper for their information take up the idea that our government is rotten from top to bottom, and that most of our public men are 'grafters,' when the fact is that the administration of our public affairs is as free from speculation and fraud as it has ever been since the formation of the government."

This is doubtless true, but it has been unjustly through the influence of a free and fearless press that it is true. While "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," so long will a fearless and independent press keep its searchlights turned upon public men and their conduct of public affairs.

"My baby was terribly sick with the diarrhoea," says J. H. Deane, of Williams, Oregon. "We were unable to cure him with the doctor's assistance, and as a last resort we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I am happy to say it gave immediate relief and a complete cure." For sale at the St. Helens pharmacy.
