THANKSGIVING.

Thanksgiving Day, which we have just observed, was truly a thanksgiving. Never in the history of our nation was there such a degree of thrift, prosperity and wealth as is now being enjoyed by the people everywhere, and that is reason enough to be truly thankful. The past year has added to the opportunities of the American people to forge ahead in a sense of wealth, with consequent happiness, for wealth, where there is health, consitutes the highest degree of happiness with most people. With some of us there have been occurrences during the past years which wounded our hearts, and brought blights upon our hopes, but upon philosophical view these were but the consequences that come along down the vicissitudes of time, which heal the wounds and bring sunshine and happiness to hearts in gloom. As a nation we have experienced the dire calamity of the loss of an honored executive, but we feel thankful that the good influences left by that martyred man has enabled us to continue in a just and righteous course, and that we have at the helm of our ship of state another whose iron will, pronounced determination and honesty of purpose will carefully guide us in our onward career. These conditions invite us to rest secure in our present prosperity and faith in its continuance.

ONE of the exigencies of the day is called to mind by a circumstance that occurred in our county seat last week, when a man, whom the battles of life for more than three score years and ten have left their mark upon with telling effect, was committed to the asylum for want of a more suitable institution where he might receive the treatment and consideration which he needs and is worthy of. Although physically, mentally and financially unable to care for himself as he should be cared for, it is extremely unfortunate that he now has to be confined in such an institution as an asylum, where the environments are such as to drive the thorn of distraction deep into the wounds of hopelessness and despair, occasioned by circumstances over which the enfeebled old soul had not the power of control. There should be an ititution provided and maintained by the state where such people could have a home and necessary and proper treatment, without being surrounded by lunatics, which fact alone would produce violent insanity in even a stronger physique and mind. Old man Lane is not insane, but his mind is weak and he is unable to care for himself, and if there had been any place other than an asylum, there is where he should be taken for treatment and care. Such a case calls out all the sympathetic qualities of man, but sympathy does not repair this old man's wounded feelings, restore his mind to its normal condition nor supply the place necessary for the care of such unfortunates.

RAINIER has scored a victory, and if any element was lacking to win her the distinction of being one of the lively towns of the county, that requisite has been supplied in the recent acquisition of so important an enterprise as an export sawmill, such as the new proprietors of the Smith mill will make of the plant, and the achievement is one that the people of that place may pardonably be exultant over. Such an important enterprise is one that any place would rightly welcome with heraldry, that the whole country round about might become apprised of the fact that the town possesses not only the natural inducements, but the degree of development and enterprise, mingled with the good fortune of rail and water transportation as to afford inducement for so valuable a thing as an export sawmill, which will give employment to no less than one hundred persons. It is enterprises of that kind that builds and makes a town and sustains the people in it; that gives encouragement to those already there to invest, improve and enlarge, and invites others who would like to invest and enter into commercial pursuits, which also enlarges the capacity and enhances the value of property. Rainier has gradually been forging ahead for several years, the citizens doing what they could by their own means to build up and improve the town, until it became known as a good business point, where employment could be had for the seeking and where good educational facilities existed, not the least important thing in the consideration of people looking for a desirable location, where not only a competency might be earned and laid by, but where hope for future greatness could be entertained not in vain. We are not inclined to view these transpiring events with a look of envy or malice, but rather feel proud to glory in the achievements of our sister town and extend hearty congratulations upon her present good fortune and express the hope that other and equally important additions may soon be made to her already quite large list of commercial enterprises.

JUST now everthing in the way of real estate seems to be assuming new values. During the past few months many Eastern people have come West in search of new homes, where climate, general healthfulness and fair opportunities for business enterprise present themselves. Some of these people have chosen Columbia county as the nearest perfect of all places according to their ideas. Among the new-comers are men of some means, who have been in business in other states, and who have the necessary push and energy to insure success in any country. They will go into the country, for the most part, and develop and help build up the county. In many instances the result will be the division of some of the larger tracts of land owned by one individual, and there will be a better degree of cultivation, more people, better roads, better homes, better schools and a better condition of affairs all around. One of the principal reasons for people choosing this county as a home is the certainty of its rapid development, its proximity to the state metropolis and its certainty to become a prosperous and wealthy county in the course of a very few years. This year Oregon has been blessed with abundant crops, fruits of all kinds have done well, granaries and barns are well filled, stock is looking well, and everthing should assist in promoting a feeling of hope and good cheer. There is an abundance of employment throughout the county for those desiring work, and the conditions existing here are of a most inviting nature. We do not consider it overstepping the bounds of truthfulness to say positively that fifty new families have located in the vicinity of St. Helens within the last year, and the degree of development going on is reason for congratulation and hope. We know that other parts of the county have received additions to the population, and the prospect is all but discouraging. We bid a most hearty welcome to the new-comers who have appeared to add their brains, brawn and capital for the up-building of Columbia county.

RUMOR says, quite unnecessarily, that the president is writing his message with his own hand and in his own way. Who expected anything else of Theodore Roosevelt? But rumor says further that this first Roosevelt message to congress will be a short one. That's a pleasant hearing and we hope it's so. In the beginning the message was, as regards size, a very modest affair. It did not even emulate the bare-ribbed attenuation of the "speech from the throne," against the American equivalent of which it was, indeed, in a way, a Jeffersonian protest, but there was nothing of the Daniel Lambert about it in the third president's time nor in the fourth. It grew a little in Monroe's time, grew quite perceptibly in John Quincy Adams', grew portentiously in Andrew Jackson's. He was as copious when he had a controversy on hand as he was pugnacious. Of the later antebellum president, Polk was a sad offender as regards prolixity, and not the only one. It has already become an unwritten law of the White House that all the more important things said in the reports of the heads of departments should be said over again in the message. Only one president since Abraham Lincoln's time has ventured to disregard this law, and he only once. If President Roosevelt, in the coming message, breaks this foolish unwritten law (which is only a custom, after all) into smithereens, he will do a good thing for himself and his successors, for the people of 1901 and their descendants. The custom, once broken, is pretty surely done for. The rehash of the departmental reports became long ago a weariness to presidents and public alike. The short message will have thousands of eager, interested readers, where the unconscienably long message has tens.

A HANDSOME school building, handsomely furnished and surrounded by handsome grounds is a source of intellectual and moral stimulus and uplift second only to the personal influence of a strong, pure, healthy, bright and enthusiastic teacher. These two conditions make the ideal school. Fortunately for the local school, it is deficient in these respects only in the former condition, and that deficiency is now practically supplied. By the time arrives for the opening of school another year there will be a beautiful school building adorning the spot where now stands a structure used for a school-house. This indicates thrift, enterprise, progression, and is evidence of the fact that educational matters are held in high estimation by our people as a condition to which our loftiest aims should be directed. We want better educational advantages; the times demand them. A good school in a community is the keystone in the archway of all the loftier ideals of life.

THERE is an effort being made to put Oregon history in such a form as to induce teachers to present the subject systematically in our schools. It has been suggested that a history be written on the state and placed in every public school, that teachers and pupils may have, at all times, access to a work that will give in detail the history of the discovery, growth and development of Oregon. The subject is worthy of the thought and the best efforts of those interested in Oregon history, and that should include all Oregonians, either by birth or residence, for Oregon history is one of the most interesting subjects in the development of the nation.—Oregon School Journal.

AN Eastern Oregon exchange is authority for the statement that Senator Mitchell contemplates introducing a bill for the establishment of an Eastern Oregon federal judicial district, with its own judge, marshal, clerk, United States district attorney and other judicial officers. Should the measure introduced become a law, it is the purpose of Senator Mitchell to have the federal building necessary to accomodate the court, located in Baker City. When plans for this are well under way, it is probable that a postoffice and court building could be combined, giving to Baker a substantial structure of beauty and large accommodations.

IDLENESS is dry rot in the nation as it is in the individual. If mankind would progress it must find employment for all its members. This employment must not necessarily be toil. A man does not have to labor ten or twelve hours out of each twenty-four in order to have good health. Health requires almost constant employment, but not almost constant labor. Toil is not even necessary to health. The great question of the age is how we shall furnish employment that will bring sustenance and health to our entire population.

MACLAY says he is waiting the verdict of the court of inquiry before sending out revised copies of his "history." If the creature had the pride of a lobster or brains equal to those of a gnat, he would not send out any revised or otherwise. Every copy must declare the author a liar and a slanderer, the charge being a simple acknowledgment that he knows himself to be these things. Schley's vindication can hardly be regarded as complete until Maclay has been kicked from the service he disgraces.

THE postoffice department claims knowledge that a thousand or more second and fourth class postmasters have been swindled out of sums ranging from two hundred and fifty to a thousand dollars by "green goods" men, who professed to be able to furnish postage stamps at a big discount. The sharpers got the money and, of course, did not furnish the goods. And the postmasters did not not dare to make complaint.

COLUMBIA county received sufficient of awards and honorable mention from the Buffalo Pan-American exposition to make us all glad we live in so good a county, one capable of producing articles worthy of such honor. It may be truly and honorably said that these awards resulted from and by reason of merit and not through any "pull" or other influence

CLATSKANIE NEWS ITEMS.

Christian Preisler has moved his family to the metropolis for the winter to get in out of the wet.

Our slippery street crossings are being replaced by substantial plank walks as rapidly as the marshal and assistants can do the work.

C. W. Jones is getting his house in Hazel Grove moved around to face the new county road and expects to build an addition in its new locality.

T. J. Flippin is bringing plank to town from his mill with a purpose to fight it out, mud or no mud, until he completes the orders given him.

Extensive preparations are going on for a literary and musical entertainment to be given on Wednesday evening of this week by the Junior League.

It is expected that our merchants will close their stores on at least a portion of Thanksgiving Day, and a programme for appropriate services to be held in church has been announced for the forenoon.

It was feared that turkeys would be scarce about here for Thanksgiving, but as the day approached, the fowls put in their appearance also, and any person with the cash could procure one without difficulty.

Dan Guman, a familiar figure about Page's store, has taken a wife (and some children) to himself, and has also purchased the Mrs. Aldridge property, on Walnut street, and expects soon to enjoy the comforts of a home. His friends offer congratulations.

A young men's brigade has been organized in town for mutual, social and intellectual improvement along moral lines. Recognizing the interest of the pastor here, Rev. J. K. Hawkins, in their behalf, a present of a fine turkey was sent him Monday with the compliments of the brigade.

A number of the boys of greater and lesser size, procured musical instruments more or less discordant in sound, on last Saturday evening, to organize a Calathumpean band and proceed to serenade somebody. After diligent inquiry as to who needed serenading, the organization adjourned without action as there seemed no demand for their services.

Some boys, like crows, want to get up in the world and look down for game. Dan Carter climbed up in the woodshed belonging to the school property, a few days ago, but could not compete with the crow in getting down, and carries one arm in a sling on a account of a break near the wrist. Some other boys will probably do as well later on. Nothing like the rising generation showing what it is capable of.

The recent rise in the Clatskanie river started thousands of logs floating, too many in fact for a successful voyage to tide water in so small a stream. The result was that a jam was started which speedily assumed proportions too great to be successfully dealt with and the logs are piled up in great shape some two miles above tide water. It is reported however that about 500 logs got through ahead of the obstruction.

Frank Merrill was in town last week from University Park. He resigned his offices of school director and member of the city council, and has for the present at least, cut himself loose from our town, where for nearly a score of years he has been a prominent citizen. Perhaps University Park will give larger opportunities for his talents, but we will welcome him back if he finds he has made a mistake in moving away.

"When last night's train arrived in from Portland, Officer Thompson saw a man climbing down from the top of one of the cars, and placed him under arrest," says Thursday's Astoria Budget. When the man was taken to the police station it was found that he was well dressed, wore diamonds and had an abundance of money in his pockets. He said he was a "tourist" and had boarded the train at Scappoose, paying the brakesman $1 to ride on the top of a car. He had a belt around his waist which was stuffed with bank notes." While there are plenty of people about Scappoose who wear good clothes and have plenty of money, we think none are so penurious as to care to take a midnight journey on the hurricane deck of a passenger coach, just for the sake of saving a dollar. He must have been a "tourist," indeed.

COMMERCIAL NOTES

The current number of the Columbia River and Oregon Timberman, published by George Cornwall, in Portland, contains the following notes of commercial matters in this county, of interest to our readers:

Lane & Lane, of Mist, are cutting cedar for the Portland market.

C. A. Dannaher, of Chicago, is in Portland, after a brief Eastern trip.

W. J. Deits has severed his connection with the Western Cedar Company, at Rainier, Oregon. Storey and Kern continue.

Patch & Plue, the Rainier, Oregon, sash and door manufacturers, have dissolved partnership, Mr. Plue continuing the business.

A. Foote, of Westport, has put two million feet of logs into tide water this season. His daily output of logs is 40,000 feet. He expects to operate his camp all winter.

Henry Colvin, of Marshland, expects to build his road into a new bunch of timber. The extension will be a mile in length. He will shut down probably during the month and build his road. He is putting in some fine logs mixed with considerable cedar. The biggest load he hauled with the Fout's grip wheel was 47,750 feet. Part of the road grade is 28 per cent.

The Timberman is in receipt of the following letter from Thomas Cooper, assistant to the president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, dated Tacoma, November 2: "Replying to yours of the 1st inst., this company has not let any contract for construction of the proposed Scappoose branch. The surveys have not yet been completed, and the construction of the line will not be determined upon until that work has been done."
