Benton county is also troubled with an epidemic of bad roads. It seems odd that in so wealthy a county as Benton and one of the first settied sections of the state there should be such a condition of roads as are described in the following item taken from the Corvallis Gazette: "It is a public outrage that the county roads should be in the condition we find some of them at present. For instance, between Philomath and Corvallis, a distance of about seven miles, the roads are in such a bad condition in many wisces that a feather bed would sink out of sight almost instantly. For this deplorable state of affairs there is no excuse. This is one of the mainly traveled roads of the county and is old enough to have had something substantial done on it. The public is largely to blame for this condition and it is a sad commentary that if the public deserved any better roads they would have them."

George Clark was up from his home back of Reuben, Wednesday, paying taxes and attending to other business matters. Clark brothers are three of the progressive young men of that portion of the county, at present being extensively engaged in the manufacture of lumber and shingles, the latter in particular. About a year and a half ago these gentlemen purchased the Horgren mill, refitted it and operated it until about two months ago they purchased an entire new lot of machinery, which has just recently been started in operation. They have not crected a kila, but as their product is cut from dead timber and shape as a subject to the convention:
