MEMORIAL DAY.

Another year has passed and the people of this nation will again today do honor to its martyred dead by the fitting observance of one of the most cherished of all public days—memorial, or more often referred to as decoration day. The occasion presents itself and the people welcome the opportunity to evidence their appreciation of the loyal service rendered the nation in an hour of peril by the gallant armies that marched forth in defense of its unity, its honor and its life. Today, the 30th of May, will the graves of those departed heroes be strewn with flowers, the tender evidences of our regard for them and our appreciation of the service they rendered. It is a season for perspective and retrospective contemplation. It impels us to look into the future for the fulfillment of the grand aspirations of the noble patriots who are now fighting for our country's honor and glory, and at the same time it bids us reflect upon the sacrifices which were made by the vast army of honored dead in order that our country might live, that its integrity might be preserved, its glory be un tarnished, and that all within its domain might enjoy the priceless boon of liberty, peace and prosperity. The wisdom, acts and lives of those men, through whose country patriotism, fidelity and sacrifices our nation has grown and prospered, are worthy of all emulation. It is only out of the lives of such men as these that as great a country as ours can be built. It is only by emulating their ambitions, sacrifices and loyalty that the integrity of our country and its institutions can be perpetuated. One by one these heroes are passing the lead roll call and taking their places in the ranks of the legions which have preceded them to the land which is not rent by the strife of war. We will, therefore, today, approach their last bivouac with feelings of unguished respect and sorrow, and tenderly pay them the only tribute of honor, inscribed providence has placed within our power—a few peaceful emblems of a nation's inward sense of gratitude to its benefactors and heroes. And also will we perform another sacred duty, that of tenderly approaching the last earthly resting place of dear ones, covering their graves with a profusion of sweet flowers, and dropping a tear, still mindful of the fact that though dead, they still live. The observance of the day cannot be too general.

There is one feature about politics which is also a part of our national character, and that is to magnify all the good characteristics of one set of candidates and to magnify all the bad traits of the character of the opposite side, which appears to be the blemish of the political fight with some people in this country.

ESPECIALLY IF THEY HAVE A PERSONAL GRUDGE

against either of the candidates. And perhaps there is no place in the world where this venomous spirit is so prevalent as in this country. It betrays out to perfection during an election, and in people who should set a better example.

THE campaign of 1902 is drawing rapidly to a close, and next Monday at 8 o'clock the battle of ballots will begin. Locally it has been a most quiet affair, and in general a most gentlemanly campaign. In this one, as in all other such matters, there have been many little "white" lies told and some which are not so white. There is some difference of opinion, as a matter of fact, as to the merits and demerits of the various candidates, and this matter the voters will determine to the entire satisfaction of everybody, or at least it should be satisfactory to all. Whether it is the case or not, there is opportunity for the employment of honorable methods in politics just the same as in any other calling or business. People will talk, talk, talk; of what they know, and really sometimes talk of things which they know they don't know anything about. So far as the republicans are concerned they have nothing to fear from the results. The entire ticket will be elected. There is no reason why it should not be elected. Each of the nominees are in every way qualified to ably handle the details of the different offices to which they aspire, besides being the representatives of the largely dominant party. Their qualifications and reputation for honesty and congeniality is just as good, anyhow, as that of any other person in the community.

THESE seem now to be no room to doubt but that there is to be a man executed in our county for the crime of murder, which will be the first execution in the history of the county. Twelve men, good and true, have rendered a verdict of guilt against the person charged with this terrible crime, and all the laws of our land and the edicts of the Almighty are to be executed in this instance to their fullest limit. There seems now to be no circumstance that will mitigate the punishment or defeat the law. Terrible as such a thing is, contemplate upon the matter as we may, the ruler of the universe has commanded that "if man takes man's life, by man shall his life be taken." In the present case there seemed to be no half-way place. It was either guilt or innocence, and the web of guilt was so completely woven about the person charged with the crime that apparently no doubt remains. Tomorrow (Saturday) at 11 o'clock Judge McBride will pronounce the words that will condemn the man to death, and thus pay the penalty for the deed, for the wages of sin is death.

ASSAULT ON THE COMBINES.

The administration at Washington is proceeding with vigor and intelligence in its assaults on the monopolists. James J. Hill admits that the government's fight against the merger of the Northern trunk roads which are being financed by the Northern Securities company will be successful, and steps are being taken by him to run the road under separate management as before the merger. Thus one of the big combines is being overthrown. The competition which was to be abolished by the merger will now be resumed, the probability that additional track will be built by the railroads in the pool, and the public will get cheaper and better service, even though the profits of the roads will be smaller than they would be under the combination.

In the beef trust case the administration is moving with equal courage and effect. The government's charges, which have just been formulated, are that the packers are being proceeded against control 60 per cent of the fresh meat trade of the United States; that they conspire among themselves to arbitrarily raise, lower and fix prices, both from the shippers from whom they buy and to the butchers to whom they sell; that they maintain a blacklist against wholesale and retail customers whom they want to punish for any reason; that they impose cartage costs for the delivery of meats which increase the meat charges to dealers who can afford to pay and shut others out altogether; and that they have entered into a conspiracy with railroad companies which give them the packers of the combine a monopoly of the meat trade of the country. For these reasons the government asks for perpetual injunction against the packers for maintaining a conspiracy in restraint of trade and against the laws of the United States.

There is not a doubt but what the government can make a strong case against the meat combine. In fact, some of the representatives of the combine are showing symptoms of the weakening which has effected James J. Hill in the railroad merger. Here, as in the railroad conspiracy, the government stands an excellent chance to win. It is a reality well known, of course, that the packers injure the cattle raisers as well as the consumers. They fix the rates to the cattle raisers or shippers from whom they buy as well as they do to the butchers to whom they sell. They are masters of the situation on both ends of the line, hitting producers equally with consumers. Consequently producers equally with consumers have a vital interest in suppressing the trust. It is one of the deplorable features of the case that the assault on the trust hits the men who raise the cattle and who cannot afford the losses to which they are subjected in the struggle as well as it does the trust, but if the trust be overthrown the restoration of competition and the free action of supply and demand will benefit producers as well as consumers. There is a strong probability at this moment that the trust will be crushed.

CIRCULATION OF RUMORS.

The circulation of rumors when they are once set afloat is as remarkable as their origin. The rumor manufacturer hears of something or thinks of something he would like to have take place, and starts down the street. He casually and confidently stops every man he meets that he knows and imparts information to him on the quiet. Each of these victims has his confidential friends and he imparts the news and they "go do likewise" until every man in the town has heard the rumor. It soon gets to be public property, and it matters not how false it may be, it is useless to attempt to trace it to the first man. A great deal of harm is done in this way, and it is a favorite aid in politics. In this manner it gets out that such and such a candidate is as good as defeated already and that a certain candidate is about to withdraw from the race and a thousand other campaign stabs. From the statement of one man, whether he has any foundation for making the statement or not, in a few hours' time he may ruin the prospects of a candidate or do him great damage, and in this same way character is blasted.

Campaign rumors have begun to materialize and, as election day approaches it would be well to demand of the one giving starting rumors, where he learned it. A fair warning of the people with the truth before them is all that the republicans desire.

SUCCESS ON THE FARM.

IT has often been noticed that a feeling of discontent and dissatisfaction with the present conditions of farm life is prevalent among the farmers of this country. They often think farm life lonely, and object strongly to its restrictions. They believe that the royal road to success lies in the city, and that they have only to go there to become millionaires in a very short length of time. Country boys think there are many more opportunities in the city than in the country to accumulate wealth that no previous preparation is needed to take care of them; and when they attempt to realize some of their golden dreams, these deluded young men find out what a serious mistake they have made. In order to find some consolation for their disappointments they frequently become dissipated, play games of chance to retrieve themselves, and only sink deeper in the mire of failure. There are, of course, notable exceptions to this rule, and there are many of the untutored country boys who go to the city, thinking they have struck their El Dorado with no other assistance than what is derived from their ambition, and find themselves in a very serious predicament.

Much of the discontent with farm life on the part of boys and young men is caused by farmers complaining of their lot. They compare their situations with those of men in the city and come to the conclusion that they have to work harder and obtain fewer or smaller results. Their incomes are variable and subject to many adverse conditions, and therefore they maintain that they are suffering under trials which are unknown to the city man in business or in the professions. Unfortunately the newspapers themselves are often to blame for this dissatisfaction with farm life. Reporters have a way of writing only of successes, entirely ignoring the many failures in city life; and for some un known reason little is said about the many prosperous farmers who are great land holders, and who could buy and sell the average merchant ten times over. Thus the country boy is led to think that the farmer plods along without achieving any noteworthy success.

A very good way to give the farmer boy useful information on this subject, and get him interested in farm work, is to let him subscribe for one or more good agricultural papers in which he may be able to learn something about the progress made by the agriculturalist. When he reads about farming and sees that it is ranked with many of the highest vocations, he will begin to realize that it affords as good opportunities for success as any business in the city. Of course, the farmer must work hard, early and late; but he has an opportunity to study, and he does not have to work any harder proportionately than the merchant who has the same amount of work to do all the year around.

It is an erroneous idea to believe there is any degradation in hard work or wearing soiled or dirt-begrimed clothing. Such evidences of toil are a thousand times worthier of respect than the immaculate cleanliness of idleness. Creased pantaloons are all very well in some instances, but they do not indicate that the wearer has accomplished any more than the man who wears them begrd at the knees. The farmer and his son need to comprehend the nature and value of their products are far more necessary and indispensable to the progress of the world than the achievements of the professional or business man in the city.

If there is any old-time republican who thinks of voting with the democrats on Monday, was it he would do one thing: Go into some quiet corner where you will not be disturbed for half an hour, and think back over the history of the party for the last forty years, or as much of it as you personally remember. Was the democratic party right on the slavery question? Was it right during the war lines? Was it right during the reconstruction period? Was it right in regard to resumption of specie payments? Was it right in regard to tariff or free trade? Was it right on the question of building up our manufactures? Was it right on the free coinage of silver? Is it right in trading our army in the Philippines? Is it right in demanding that we should be confined by the treaty of Paris? Would the country be better or worse off if democratic principles had prevailed in the elections in the past where these things were the issues? After you have thought it over in that way then ask yourself: Do I want to help that party back to power now?

The private character and the public record of every candidate on the republican ticket needs no recommendation at our hands, for they have lived too long in this country for the onslaught of the political prevaricators, who are trying to persuade voters that they are bad men. No intelligent or fair minded person will believe any such stuff. But this is a political trick which is being used to bring disension in the republican party, but all loyal republicans, who are loyal to republicanism and the republican cause, and who want a clean set of officers, will not be influenced to vote against the republican ticket because a few dissatisfied persons are now in evidence.

The editor of this paper had the unalloyed pleasure of being present at the first two parts of the programme of the May festival held at Clatskanie during the last few days, and we regret that every person in the county could not have been present also. Clatskanie people are to be congratulated upon the enterprise and interest manifested in their undertaking. Five consecutive evenings of exceptionally meritorious entertainment and moral instruction means a volume of labor, in this instance, however, fully repaid, with compound interest. Similar undertakings should be encouraged everywhere. The effort would always be fully repaid.

THESE are the men who have had his quarrel just. Col. Bryan will give the campaign of 1904 with the combined support of the crimes of 1873, 1896 and 1900.

OVER on the hill, near the site of the old school-house, there is being builded the foundation—the solid rock foundation for one of the most creditable and noteworthy improvements ever made in Columbia county. The superstructure will soon be started and by another few weeks there will have been completed an educational institution in our town that would do credit to any city. The bonds have been sold and the cash is on hand with which to meet the expense, and while the process of paying will be long and slow, the benefit to the community in more than one way will repay us ten-fold.

Science of Breadmaking.
In breadmaking, the yeast in fermenting combines with the sugar in the flour and the sugar which has been added to the flour and carbonic acid gas and alcohol are produced. The gas tries to escape, but is confined by the elastic, strong gluten which forms the walls of the cells in which it is held, its expansion changing the solid dough into a light, spongy mass. The kneading process distributes the yeast through the bread, making the grain even. The water used in mixing the bread softens the gluten and cement all the particles of flour together, ready for the action of the carbonic acid gas. In baking, the loaf grows larger as the heat expands the carbonic acid gas, converting the water into steam and the alcohol into vapor. In the meantime it loses one-sixth of its weight by the escape of these elements through the pores of the bread. Some of the starch changes into gum, the cells of the rest are broken by the heat, and the gluten is softened and made tender and the bread is in the condition most easily acted upon by the digestive fluids.
