

Rev. Mr. Philbrook left Tuesday for Eastern Oregon, whether he goes to take to church work.

Mr. and Mrs. Darnall were in this city Monday evening, the guests of their cousin, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Powell.

The ladies of the Congregational church, who served ice cream here on election day, did a thriving business.

Al Harrison and family, who have resided at Kalama for a number of years, have returned to Houlton, where they expect to make their future home.

Robert Payne was up from Quincy with the election returns Tuesday, and were also Mr. John Dibbles, of Rainier, Mr. S. M. Graham, of Marshland, Mr. S. C. Tchever, of Clatskanie, Mr. D. W. Freeman, of Mist, T. O. Watts, of Goble, and W. L. Brown, of Aplary.

It is thought the Lewis river railroad bridge will not be completed much before October 1, and that the bridge across the Columbia near Vancouver will not be finished before 1905. Northern Pacific passenger trains will run into Portland via Vancouver and the ferry will be used at Kalama for freight trains only.

All traces of the rock barge Waukiakum, which was wrecked recently off Long Beach, have disappeared. Where she went into the breakers opposite Seaview, the sea breaks as usual and what is left of the barge must have sunk into the mud. The Waukiakum was loaded with rock at Fisher's Landing, and was on her way to Gray's harbor where the rock is used in building a government breakwater. While crossing the bar at the mouth of the river, she struck a log, and began to take water so fast that she had to be run ashore in order to save her crew. The barge was valued at $25,000 and her cargo at $1500.

There are few salt-water sailors who if asked the question, "what seaport handles the greatest tonnage," would not answer without hesitation, Liverpool. But Liverpool has now dropped to fifth place, and the honor of being the greatest seaport in the world, belongs to a little city of less than 80,000 people, whose harbor is closed with ice four months of every year. Duluth, Minn., last year handled seventeen million tons of shipping, London, sixteen million, New York, fifteen million, Chicago, fourteen million and Liverpool, twelve million. These figures are given by James J. Hill.

The prospects are that shad will be more plentiful than salmon in the Columbia in a few years, if they are not already so. More shad than salmon are being caught now, and the gear in which they are caught is made for catching salmon. About a ton and a quarter of shad came up from Pillar Rock yesterday, this being about the only place where any are being taken now, says the Oregonian. As the shad spawn in the brackish water about the head of the tide, while salmon press on up to the pools in mountain streams to deposit their eggs, they do not interfere with each other. Some of these days when fishing for shad becomes a business on the Columbia, the output will be very large.

The river and harbor bill as reported by the conference committee carries the following appropriations: Mouth of the Columbia, $600,000 cash, and contracts for $1,400,000 additional; Willamette and Columbia, from Portland to the sea, $225,000 of which $175,000 is for the construction of a dredge for use in the construction of a dredge for use in the river. Hart's project for a canal between The Dalles and Celilo is adopted, and a balance of $214,000, with an appropriation of $100,000 additional, is made available for commencing work. The house conferees, however, secured a proviso that before entering on this work an examination shall be made by a board of engineers with a view of modifying the Hart plan in such a way as to diminish the cost. If it is found that the project cannot be improved and the cost reduced, the work will proceed without delay, according to the pending plans. The Columbia, between Vancouver and the mouth of the Willamette gets $2,000 instead of $18,000 as per the senate amendment. For the Willamette above Portland, and the Yamhill, is appropriated $68,000. A portion of this amount is to be expended in retreating the banks of the Willamette near Independence, and above Corvallis, and for improving the Long Tom river.

Alfalfa as a hay crop stands pre-eminent. The best land on the farm should be devoted to the growing of it. Soils having a porous subsoil should be chosen and should be prepared by clean cultivation so as to rid them of weeds and crab grass. One year in a crop that can be thoroughly cultivated throughout the season to be followed next year by a crop of oats is a good method of preparation. Plow deep and thoroughly as soon as the crop is removed and keep the soil in fine tilth by frequent harrowings every week or two as the weeds start, or after each rain, to break the crust. Seedlings from the middle of September to the last of October have given good results in Oklahoma. Spring seeding should not be made until late in March or early April and it will be bothered by weeds and crab grass unless the land is very clean. Twenty pounds of good seed per acre should be sown. This may be broadcasted, but drilling is a surer and more satisfactory way. A common grain seed drill may be used. It may be necessary to mix the seed with some material, such as fine corn meal, to get the drill to sow the proper amount. Seeding should be delayed until the soil contains sufficient moisture to give the plants a good start. No stock should be pastured on alfalfa the first and second years. Excessive pasturing is responsible for many failures to succeed with alfalfa. Dinking in July and August is sometimes necessary to keep the crab grass down. Alfalfa should be cut for hay after the plants have begun to bloom and only wilting should be allowed in the swath. The curing should be done in small piles and the hay should be put in stack before it is fully dry so as not to lose the leaves.

SCHIEVE WILL HANG.

Death Sentence Passed on Him Last Saturday.

What will prove to be the first hanging to take place in this county will be that of August Schieve, convicted of the murder of Joseph Schulkowski. Schieve was sentenced last Saturday by Judge McBride to pay this penalty, and the court fixed July 2nd as the date. There was a motion made for a new trial, but it was not granted. There is a very remote possibility that an appeal will be taken.

Following are the words of the court in pronouncing the sentence:

Court—(to defendant) Have you anything to say before sentence is pronounced upon you?

Defendant—I do not think I have.

Court—You have been convicted by the verdict of the jury of the highest crime known to law. You have had the benefit of able counsel and the benefit of every witness that could be urged in your favor and every matter in your favor has been fairly presented to a jury that were, in my judgment, impartial and fair, and in spite of all that you have been properly convicted. I think that the evidence in this case shows you guilty of the very highest crime known to the law, and it now becomes my duty to pronounce the judgment of the law upon you. I am mindful of the fact that this is a very solemn duty and it is one the court cannot escape and the verdict is one the jury could not escape, and there is no escaping it for you. Do not flatter yourself in the brief time that the law allows you, with any hope that this judgment is likely to be reversed. That is a very remote chance. In my judgment, speaking from a great deal of experience, you have no hope of that, and so it only remains for you in the brief time that the court shall allow in this case, to make such atonement as you can for the offense you have committed. There is no hope in an offense such as you have committed that you will ever experience or receive any reprieve or pardon from any power on earth, and there is for you but one source and that is to seek and try to make atonement and reconcile your conscience with a higher power, with whom alone is mercy and abundant pardon. That is your only hope and I earnestly beseech you in the few hours that are left you to make such atonement as you can, as your time is brief.

It is the judgment of the court that you be taken hence to the county jail of this county, and that you be confined until the time which will be fixed by the warrant of this court hereafter issued, will be on the second day of next July, at an hour to be fixed by the warrant and at that day you be taken thence to the jail yard and enclosure around the county jail in this county and at the hour to be designated by the warrant which I shall hereafter issue to the sheriff you be there hanged by the neck until you are dead, and may God have mercy on your soul.

TRACED BY TRIFLES.

Incidents Relative to the Conviction of August Schieve.

That truth, if not stanger than fiction, is fully as interesting, has been demonstrated again in the conviction of August Schieve for the murder of Joseph Schulkowski. Sherlock Holmes, has worked out some clever cases, through the assistance of Dr. A. Conan Doyle, his creator, but the famous mythical detective has a rival in Harrison Allen. Mr. Allen, besides holding the position of assistant secretary of the republican state central committee, is district attorney for the fifth district. This district includes Columbia county, where the murder occurred.

Romance, mystery, acumen and shrewd calculations were combined in the case that has resulted in the conviction of Schieve as a murderer in the first degree. Few of the mythical sleuths worked out clues more carefully or with better results than District Attorney Allen. The story of how the crime was fastened upon Schieve sounds more like the fabrications spun from the prolific brain of some author of detective fiction than an every-day murder case. It is as sensational as a melodrama and much more realistic.

Sherlock Holmes' basic principle in unearthing crime was the search for trivial commonplaces, which, while overlooked by the casual observer, led directly to the culprit in the case which he had under consideration. This process of reasoning, or tracing of a certain fact from insignificant clues, applied to cases invariably brought about the desired end. Of course, to catch a criminal in fiction is as easy as rolling off a log, but in real life it is, oh! so different. This theoretical detective, Sherlock Holmes, was pleased to call the relation of trifles to a crime as "the science of observation and deduction." So great was the skill of Holmes, or rather Dr. Doyle, in working out a mystery, upon paper, that the reputation of the sleuth of fiction became world-wide.

In following out his duty, pursuing the ends of justice and exercising good, common sense, combined with an analytical mind capable of following an effect to its cause, Mr. Allen has accomplished what may have "stumped" Sherlock Holmes, or even Foxy Quillier himself.

What Allen, District Attorney Allen, did was to collect a number of small articles, such as hair, and through their instrumentality forge a chain of circumstantial evidence so strong that the defense was unable to break it and the jury quickly returned a verdict of murder in the first degree.

THE CRIME.

Joseph Schulkowski was found dead in the brush seven miles from St. Helens, December 27. Everything indicated that murder most foul had been committed in cold blood. Robbery appeared to have been the motive. The body was found under a log, where it had evidently been placed in an effort to conceal it. There were two gunshot wounds in the body and the pockets of the dead man had been rifled.

There was no clue to the murderer, apparently.

District Attorney Allen went to work on the case, but at first the prospects were anything but encouraging. Then began a minute scrutiny for evidence that would point to the assassin. They soon developed. The murdered man was identified as Joseph Schulkowski, who had been living with the Schieve family, six and one-half miles from where the body was discovered. Inquiry developed the fact that the young man had left the Schieve home the day after Christmas to go to Portland. When he left he had a sum of money in a belt, which he wore strapped around his waist. This money was gone when the body was found. The dead man had been living at Schieve's.

Such was the sum total of facts upon which to run down the murderer. The prospects for success were not encouraging. It looked as though the cold-blooded assassin would never be apprehended.

THE HUNT.

Intent upon becoming thoroughly familiar with the scene of the crime, the prosecuting officer examined the locality in which the corpse was disclosed. It soon became apparent that the crime had been perpetrated several yards from where the body lay when found. The murder was committed upon an unfrequented road, and the body had been dragged into an underbrush by the assassin and concealed, partly, by a log. Close scrutiny of the ground at the scene of the tragedy in the road revealed the fact that a horse had been in that vicinity about the time of the murder. Measurements of the hoof prints were taken as a possible clue. Next were found a few horse hairs, of a white color, lying on the ground. Their discovery was quite accidental and, while not considered of particular importance, were carefully noted. A bullet was extracted from the body of the dead man and, near the place of the shooting, was an empty 32-20 Winchester rifle shell. Soon a theory was formed, based upon these discoveries, which subsequently proved correct, in the eyes of the jury. It was argued that the assassin had been on horseback; that the horse was white or had considerable white hair; that the shot which killed Schulkowski came from a gun using a 32-20 Winchester shell. The first thing to do was to find a white horse whose hoof would correspond with those found at the scene of the crime. It developed that August Schieve, the man at whose home Schulkowski had lived, had a nag tallying with the color of hair and size of hoof of the unknown. This was a strong link in the chain against Schieve. It also became known that Schieve had a gun and that the 32-20 shell fitted the cartridge.

The evidence pointed directly to Schieve as the guilty person, but the clues did not stop here. A coat of Schieve was searched and in an inside pocket was found a page from a copy of Ik Marvel's "Reveries of a Bachelor." The relation of this find to the murder case lay in the fact that when the dead body of Schulkowski was examined several leaves from "Reveries of a Bachelor" were found in a pocket of his coat.

As though this chain of circumstantial evidence was not sufficient, District Attorney Allen proceeded to forge a few more links. He traced the suspect from his home, by means of witnesses, to the scene of the murder and back again. When Allen was through with his facts and theories he had as strong a case of circumstantial evidence formed as could be possible. Sherlock Holmes could not have exercised more skill at observing and deducting, or of building up a better theory. The result was a powerful case against Schieve, every movement of his being accounted for by the theory of Allen.

Against this mountain of evidence the attempt on the part of W. T. Vaughn, attorney for the defense, to prove an alibi failed. The alibi was introduced, but it was not heeded by the jury.

He knows that this paper aims to advertise only the best in its columns, and when he saw Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised therein for lumbago, he did not hesitate in buying a bottle of it for his wife, who for eight weeks had suffered with the most terrible pains in her back and could get no relief. He says: "After using the Pain Balm for a few days my wife said to me, 'I feel as though born anew,' and before using the entire contents of the bottle she was able to get up and take up her household duties." Dug Up $8000.

Samuel Taylor, of Yakima City in Washington, while engaged in cleaning out an old cellar at his place recently, unearthed a large sum of money amounting to $8000. The money is said to have been placed there for safe keeping by Thomas Jefferson Chambers, a uncle of Mr. Taylor, who is now 70 years old and has a poor memory. He is a pioneer of a quarter of a century, and is a character in his way. Some time ago the old man hurried $8000 and it was a long time before he could recall where he had buried it. Last winter he offered a lady in Yakima City his cash box, asking her to invest the money. She refused to do so, and it is supposed that he hid it away himself, fearing the banks. Recently he secreted all his money in the cellar in question and forgot where he put it. Once before Mr. Chambers hid away $6000 in cash, and some men in digging post holes, discovered it and returned it to the owner. A like sum was once dug up near the same place by a man by the name of Atkins. It was in a bottle and belonged to Joe Bowser, living near there.

How About Your Title?

ARE YOU SURE it is all right? Remember that it is the RECORD that governs. It is our business to search the records and show what they contain in relation to land titles. If you contemplate buying land or loaning money on real estate security, take no man's word, but insist upon knowing what the record shows regarding the title. An abstract is as essential as food in buying it. We have the only set of abstract books in the county. All work promptly executed and satisfaction guaranteed. If you have property to insure give us a call. We are agents for the best fire insurance companies in the world. If you have property for sale list it with us and we will find a buyer.
