Diggs—I hear you have sold your restaurant. Wasn't it a moneymaker?

Biggs—Yes; I was making $50 daily.

Diggs—Then what was your reason for disposing of it?

Biggs—Oh, I was compelled to sell it on account of poor health.

Diggs—Huh! Why didn't you take your meals somewhere else?

Pe-ru-na Cures and Prevents Catarrh

Any one who wishes perfect health must be entirely free from catarrh. Catarrh is well nigh universal; almost omnipresent. Peruna is the only absolute safeguard known. A cold is the beginning of catarrh. To prevent colds, to cure colds, is to cheat catarrh out of its victims. Peruna not only cures catarrh, but prevents it. Every household should be supplied with this great remedy for coughs, colds, and so forth.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

"What is that for?" asked the friend.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The following notice was recently found tacked on the door of a church: "There will be preaching in this house a week from next Wednesday. A traveling man who drove across the country to a little town in western Kansas the other day met a farmer hauling a wagon-load of water. "Where do you get water?" he asked. Inexpensive Mayoralty Campaign.

It cost D. P. Jones just $15 to win one of the most strenuous mayoralty campaigns ever known in Minneapolis. This information is sworn to by the mayor-elect in an affidavit of expenses filed with the city clerk. Of the $15, $10 was paid to the country auditor for filing his certificate of nomination, and the other $5 was given to the city clerk for filing his certificate of election. When asked concerning his expenses, Mr. Jones said that the money spent in his campaign was donated and used by men interested in his election, and with whose business the candidate had nothing to do.

SIMPLE HABITS ARE BEST.

Those of Great Men Contributed Much to Their Success in Life.

Benjamin Franklin, who is famed for his discovery that lightning is electricity, and who introduced the American colonial postal system, and who furthermore, as will be remembered, served America at the court of France as minister plenipotentiary, was one of the leaders of early modern times in the study of nature and nature's laws, and not the least in domestic science. His first maxim was: "Eat not to dullness; drink not to elevation." Even in his youth his mind was filled with schemes for self-regulation and guidance, and he set before him the task of acquiring the habitude of certain cardinal virtues based upon simple living and habits of thought. His constant effort was to better the condition of mankind, and his methods were intensely practical.

Since the early times, simplicity of preaching, teaching and eating has been the great factor in the world's advancement, says the London Catering World. The great mass of mankind do not understand nor care for, abstruse reasoning.

The record of the life of Abraham Lincoln is traced back to that time when he was seen sitting on a rail fence, in one of America's small western villages, with a law book in one hand and with a piece of maize bread in the other. Abraham Lincoln was a man of simple habits, and his greatness was to no small extent dependent upon that early simplicity and goodness which gave strength to conscience, mind and body.

Frederick the Great fostered above all agriculture and the cultivation of fruits and vegetables. His endeavor to benefit his people was based upon the natural laws pertaining to their health and simple happiness. He recognised the fact, ever clear to the minds of the leaders of the Germans, that the body is the basis, and must be simply and completely nourished in order to perfect the soldier, statesman or the peasant.

Bismarck's great work had for its basis the recognition of the simple laws of nature. He followed them, and as a result there came about a new manhood and a new womanhood, first in Prussia, and later in the empire. Bismarck's natural and acquired astuteness taught him, as a similar perception and reasoning had taught Frederick the Great, that political economy, rural economy and domestic economy are, as sciences, closely interdinked and interdependent in their relations to the state.

While in France as United States minister Thomas Jefferson wrote respecting the education of a daughter who was with him in Paris: "Or domestic economy she can learn nothing here, yet she must learn it somewhere, as it is of more solid value than anything else." To his friend, Peter Carr, he said: "A strong body makes a strong mind." Jefferson practiced his preaching by subsisting mainly upon simple natural foods, and he labored zealously all through his busy life for the upbuilding of an American system of education which should teach men how to live in accordance with the laws of nature. He died at the age of 84, and he had not lost a tooth, nor was one of them defective.

It will be recollected that the laws of Moses are replete with instructions regarding the care of the body in sanitation and in diet, as well as in fasting and religious duties. It is due to these laws that the health of the Jews when in reasonable conditions is so universally superior to that of the average of other peoples.

NEW SPRING SUSPENSION FOR AUTOMOBILES.

Louis A. Hill, of Washington, D. C., is the inventor of a spring suspension system for automobile frames whereby there is supposed to be a greater ability of the springs to absorb the vibration and varying thrust from both the motor and the road. The construction consists of four semi-elliptical springs placed upon the axles in the usual manner, with their outer ends hinged to the ordinary frame extensions. The inner ends of the semi-elliptical springs, however, are shackled to the ends of side springs, fastened at their centers to the side members of the running gear frame.

It is claimed that in effect the rear halves of the rear springs and the front halves of the front springs are comparatively rigid, while the spring portions between the axles are extremely flexible. The inventor claims that the system adapts itself to cars of all weights and wheel bases, and that as the wheel base increases the compensating spring between the end springs is naturally increased in the correct proportion.

FISHER MAID OF MARKEN, HOLLAND.

Marken is in reality only a wide sand bank in the Zuyder Zee, that historic gulf in the German Ocean which makes the coast of Holland such a picturesque locality. This sandy island is inundated during most of the winter, but its hardy inhabitants, all of them engaged in fishing, do not mind this particularly, living almost entirely in boats. The dwellings are set on piles and are only one story in height. These little houses are painted in the brightest colors, red, green, yellow and blue. The costumes of both sexes are highly picturesque, gay colors predominating. The women are quite as hardy as the men and engage in the same occupations. The fisher maidens of Marken have often furnished models for the painters who find so much inspiration in the Netherlands.

We hear a great deal about women being fond of their church; yet in nine cases out of ten, when a woman gets married, she will give up her church if her man demands it.

Readers of Dr. Long's "A Little Brother to the Bear" will rejoice to learn, through the joyful announcement of Ginn & Co., Boston, that it is now certain that the blindness which overtook the doctor some time ago will soon be entirely cured.

Herbert B. Turner & Co., Boston, have sold the Japanese rights for the publication of "Nami-Ko" to the Yurakusha publishing house of Tokio, Japan, and that company will print it in English for the benefit of the many English-speaking people in Japan.

"Stealthy Steve," by Newton Newkirk, is one of the extravagantly comic "Foolish Series," a grotesque burlesque on the popular breed of "detective stories," good enough to laugh at as a burlesque of an extravagant type by outdoing it in extravagance that is more absurd than that of the type.

Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, president of the Armour Institute, Chicago, is publishing a series of addresses under the title, "Paths to Power." It is a singular fact that, although Dr. Gunsaulus has a reputation on both sides of the Atlantic as a preacher and lecturer of unusual power, this is the first collection of his utterances to be put into print.

"The White Terror and the Red," is an important new novel of "inner Russia," which A. Cahan has been engaged upon for a long time. Mr. Cahan has kept closely in touch with internal conditions in Russia since he was forced, as a member of the revolutionary party, to flee from the country. His dramatic romance is said to give a picture of actual Russia which has not been equaled.

E. P. Dutton & Co., New York, have recently issued the fifth edition of "The Letters Which Never Reached Him," that curiously unique record of the life and death of a love, death with the deaths of the two who lived the love. There are other books in literature to which this bears some resemblance, but none that has struck the same note, the note of the strong spirit that tries so hard to bear up against the depression of a wide separation, that compels itself to be, or seems to be, cheerful, to see and to communicate the humorous side of things with touches of gentle satire. Yet all the time there is the unbidden, a resisted undertone of melancholy, and long before the end the chill in the creeping shadow of the tragedy wrought in far-off Pekin. It is a strangely touching book that well merits the favor it has won.

"Peter Teeter Stories," a thin, square octavo, a belated juvenile holiday book, but just as effective for amusing little folk now as before Christmas, is an adaptation from the German "Struwwelpeter" of Dr. Heinrich Hoffman, of which more than 5,000,000 copies have been sold since it came out, more than half a century ago. Failing to find any book for sale which he thought fit to amuse his own little boy, and taking a lesson from his experience with sick children, he bought a blank book and filled it with his own simple stories, such as the little folk could follow, stories which the mere music of the jingles would make pleasing to children, illustrated with pictures of scenes and action that are intelligible to them. The result was a book with a phenomenal sale. This original stock has been adapted into English by Prof. H. L. Schwetzky, with additions of some new stories and pictures prepared by Raymond H. Garmon.

VILLAGES IN THE DARK

Japanese Settlements Amid Dense Groves of Evergreens.

Without having actually seen them you cannot imagine how dark some Japanese country villages remain, even in the brightest and hottest weather. In the neighborhood of Tokyo itself there are many villages of this kind. At a short distance from such a settlement you see no houses; nothing is visible but a dense grove of evergreen trees.

The grove, which is usually composed of young cedars and bamboos, serves to shelter the village from storms and also to supply timber for various purposes. So closely are the trees planted that there is no room to pass between the trunks of them; they stand straight as masts and mingle their crests so as to form a roof that excludes the sun. Each thatched cottage occupies a clear space in the plantation, the trees forming a fence about it double the height of the building. Under the trees it is always twilight, even at high noon, and the houses, morning and evening, are half in shadow. What makes the first impression of such a village almost disquieting is not the transparent gloom, which has a certain weird charm of its own, but the stillness.

There may be fifty or a hundred dwellings, but you see nobody and hear no sound but the twitter of invisible birds, the occasional crowing of cocks and the shrilling cicadae. Even the cicadae find these groves too dim and sing faintly. Being sun lovers, they prefer the trees outside the village. I forgot to say that you may s... ch... iar... se... so... pe... ha... th... th... ha... hr... la...

People Killed in Railroad Wrecks.

A report recently issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission shows that the total number of casualties to persons on railroads in the United States, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, was 55,130, comprising 2,787 killed and 51,843 injured. This shows a large increase over any other year. It is a large total, and, in comparison, may be said to be similar to the complete destruction of any one of such cities as Salt Lake City, Utah; San Antonio, Texas; Racine, Wis.; Topeka, Kan.; Waterbury, Conn.; Wilkesbarre, Pa., or Augusta, Ga., neither of which has anything like 53,000 inhabitants. In both the American and British armies, Sept. 19, and Oct. 7, 11, and 12, 1777, in the series of fights and movements around Saratoga, as included by E. S. Creasy, in his "Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World," there were less than 20,000 men; while the highest total given by C. K. Adams in Johnson's "Cyclopaedia," of the killed, wounded, and missing on both sides at Waterloo, one of the greatest battles of all time, is 54,428 men—not so many by 702 as last year's total of United States railroad casualties. The number of collisions and derailments during the past year was 11,291, involving $9,383,097 in damages to rolling stock and roadbeds. This gives the astounding increase of 648 collisions and derailments over 1903—astounding but for the reduction of employes, in 1904, by 75,000.—Frederick Upham Adams, in Success Magazine.

An Old Cure for Scurvy.

Scurvy used to be regularly treated when it was possible by burying the patients up to their necks in fresh earth, a practice officially recommended in the British navy less than a century ago. Twenty of the crew of the frigate Blonde were so treated on the shore of Donna Maria Bay, Santo Domingo. Holes were dug in the softest soil on the beach. Into each of these a man was put and buried to his chin, while a detachment of their shipmates was told off to keep the flies from their faces. They were kept in this position for two hours, and the treatment was so effective that four days later all the sufferers were able to rejoin the frigate.

As one of the good, kind ladies was walking along the tier after the church was over, saying kind words to the unfortunate sons of Adam, she stopped in front of cell 602 on the sixth floor.

She said, "My good, kind man, what in the world ever put you in here?"

He said, "Sneezing."

She said, "My goodness! How in the world could they put you in here for sneezing?"

He said, "I woke the gentleman up."—Cook County Jail Journal.

Are Never Without Pe-ru-na in the Home for Catarrhal Diseases.

Remarkable Cures Effected by Pe-ru-na

Under date of January 10, 1897, Dr. Hartman received the following letter:

"My wife has been a sufferer from a complication of diseases for the past twenty-five years. Her case has baffled the skill of some of the most noted physicians. One of her worst troubles was chronic constipation of several years' standing. She was also passing through that most critical period in the life of a woman—change of life.

"In June, 1895, I wrote to you about her case. You advised a course of Peruna and Manalin, which we at once commenced, and have to say it completely cured her.

"About the same time I wrote you about my own case of catarrh, which had been of twenty-five years' standing. At times I was almost past going. I commenced to use Peruna according to your instructions and continued its use for about a year, and it has completely cured me."—John O. Atkinson.

In a letter dated January 1, 1900, Mr. Atkinson says, after five years' experience with Peruna:

"I will ever continue to speak a good word for Peruna. I am still cured of catarrh."—John O. Atkinson, Independence, Mo., Box 272.

Mrs. Alla Schwandt, Sanborn, Minn., writes:

"I have been troubled with rheumatism and catarrh for twenty-five years. Could not sleep day or night. After having used Peruna I can sleep and nothing bothers me now. If I ever am affected with any kind of sickness, Peruna will be the medicine I shall use. My son was cured of catarrh of the larnyx by Peruna."—Mrs. Alla Schwandt

When old age comes, catarrhal diseases come also. Systemic catarrh is almost universal in old people.

Address Dr. S. B. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio, who will be pleased to give you the benefit fo his medical advice gatis.

A Confusing Advertisement.

A London editor has received from Berlin a printed notice of a new hair dye, described in English. "I deliver the hair dye from the fair to the deepest dark," the Berlin man says. Then, with a burst of candor, for which he cannot be sufficiently commended, he adds: "It produces a natural color and is thoroughly injurious."

INHERITED SCROFULA

When a child I had a very severe attack of Diphtheria, which came near proving fatal. Upon recovery the glands of the neck were very much enlarged, and after the free use of iodine, the right one was reduced to its normal size, but the left one continued to grow—very slowly at first, until it was about the size of a goose egg, which began to press on the windpipe, causing difficult breathing, and became very painful. An incision was made and a large quantity of pus discharged. The gland was removed, or as much as could with safety be taken out. For ten years I wore a little piece of cloth about an inch long in my neck to keep the place open. During this time I had to have it cut open by the doctor every time I took cold or the opening clogged. In the Spring or early Summer of 1884 I was persuaded by my wife to use S. S. S., which I did, strictly in accordance with directions. I took twenty-six large bottles, and was entirely cured, for I have not suffered since that time.
