Besides small game in abundance they killed three elk, two wild cats, a deer and a coyote. They had a good rough trip and are perfectly contented with their experience. The elk killed were of the largest size, having seven front antlers, weighing fifty, forty and thirty pounds. It took four days steady trailing to overtake them. The carcasses dressed at least seven hundred pounds each. The hunters packed all of the meat over the mountains to the road near Jewell and from there to Houlton by team.
