WASTING MONEY

The voters of very many of the road districts of Columbia County have voted to levy special taxes for road purposes, and it is assumed this money will be honestly used and considerable advantage will be derived by the various communities from the work done. Yet, under the most favorable conditions, the results achieved will not be satisfactory, for the reason that whatever is done will be in the nature of patchwork and a great deal of it will necessarily have to be gone over next year. It is probable there will be expended on our roads and bridges this year in the neighborhood of $50,000. Small pieces of good road will be built, but, being segregated, long stretches of miserably poor road will intervene, and the communities of the county will still lack permanent good roads connecting them.

The Government of the United States has learned by costly experience that the system of patchwork improvement of its own waterways is the worst kind of extravagance and therefore has adopted in many cases continuing appropriations, so that there shall be no suspension of the work and consequently none of the loss that invariably follows suspension of work upon any public improvement.

If we are to have good roads during the life of the present or the next generation we must follow the example of the general government and enter upon a thorough organized system of scientific road building and provide whatever sum of money may be necessary for that purpose, and the only possible way to to do this is by issuing bonds.

The assessed valuation of this county is about $10,000,000, and its real value is rapidly growing. Bonds could probably be floated at four per cent and the first issue could be the sum of $200,000. This would make an annual interest charge of only $8,000, and we would have on hand probably as much money as it would be wise to expend in the first year, and the districts could, if they saw fit, still levy special taxes and yet not be burdened with any more than at present. Of course we know pay day would eventually come, but the benefits to be derived from good roads would be constantly experienced and would attract to our county sufficient capital to make the burden lighter than it is at present. Subsequent issues could be provided for as needed until the county had a thorough system of main roads and laterals.

It is time this matter was taken up and discussed thoroughly, therefore the Mist invites correspondence on the subject. The people must be consulted, and nothing can be done without their consent. We want to point all sides of the question and then put it before the voters of Columbia County under the initiative law.

THE DUCK LAW

If the State of Oregon wishes to prevent the extermination of its water fowl the most effective way to do so is to prohibit the "baiting" of the duck lakes. The lakes are now a considerable source of revenue to their owners, who lease them to Portland sports who hire men to decoy the wild fowl by putting wheat in the lakes. Every Sunday and sometimes during the week, the hunters come down from Portland and other points and kill as many as possible. There is supposed to be a limit to the number they are allowed to kill, but it is common knowledge that the law in this respect is constantly violated, and it is practically impossible to enforce it. The law is an unjust one at the best, for it makes wild fowl private property, owing to the fact that feeding the ducks induces them to frequent the lakes owned or leased by the hunters and no one else gets a chance to shoot a duck without becoming liable to a term of imprisonment in the penitentiary. Prohibit feeding and all will have, as they should, an equal chance at the wild fowl, and it is reasonably certain that not so many will be killed.

The provision of the law prohibiting the sale of wild ducks should be repealed, as it is unjust in any that no one except the favored ones shall ever have a chance to have wild fowl upon their table, and, moreover, it is practically impossible to enforce such a law. Anyone who wishes to violate it can purchase ducks from the pot hunters and from many of the so-called sportsmen. It costs money to enforce these laws, and the taxpayers must foot the bills, yet the average citizen gets no benefit whatever and wholesale destruction of the water fowls continues.

As the law now stands it permits killing more than fifty ducks by any person in one week, but that amount may be killed in one day, so the Portland sport brings his friends down to the duck drive on Sunday, and each of them shoots the weeks' limit and if they can slaughter more than the law allows they charge them to the hired men. This might be prevented by making a daily instead of a weekly limit, but probably that would be evaded by the sports who are very strenuous for the enforcement of the law against poachers but very quick to violate it themselves when it suits their love of slaughter or desire to boast of a big killing.

IN MEMORIAM

(Evening Telegram)

Under the operation of statutory prohibition, recently enacted, Biloxi, a small town on the Mississippi Gulf coast, is without saloons. Biloxi is the site of the original settlement in the old Louisiana territory, and in all its history as a town of any consequence, it has never before been without the openly conducted drinking place, either as public house of the old style, or common grog shop of the new style.

Sudden and complete abandonment of the saloon in that place is therefore a notable matter. It is evidently a matter that some of the saloon men have taken much to heart; for one of them, it is said, has left hanging in the window of his former place of business a placard bearing the following inscription: "Gone but not forgotten."

There is just a little difficulty in understanding the application of this legend from the saloonman's point of view, for the reason that concerning the average saloon there are so many memories on the part of its patrons and their dependents which the saloon man should not desire to keep alive. There is no doubt as to the absolute truthfulness of that legend, but just why the ex-saloonkeeper should engage in emphasizing it is not so clear.

In Biloxi, or any other place where saloons have been doing an uninterrupted business for a century or two, there is absolute assurance of the memory of a great deal that the saloon has accomplished. But such record is never pleasant reading. It is replete with misery, and suffering and poverty and crime and suicide and violence, and all manner of things that men are ashamed of, and that make the lives of their women and children miserable and pinched. To refer to the memory of what the saloon has done as pleasantry expressed in a spirit of pique, is humorously out of place.

MR. HOFF'S REPORT.

The Mist is in receipt of the third biennial report of O. P. Hoff, Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, etc., for the State of Oregon. He has certainly devoted a great deal of work to its compilation and has made it a very valuable statistical document. Nearly four pages of very close print are given to a description of Columbia County and its principal communities. Following is what the commissioner has to say about the county seat, and it was current at the time the statistics were compiled, though St. Helens has made rapid progress since then:

"St. Helens, county seat of Columbia County, is situated on the bank of the Columbia River, one mile east of the N. P. Railroad. It was incorporated in 1889. It covers an area of one mile and has a population of 600. The assessed valuation of town property in 1907 was $363,525, with a debt of $3,000. The altitude is sixty feet. One public school house is valued at $4,500; three teachers are engaged at salaries ranging from $50 to $90. Three churches, Methodist Episcopal, Episcopal and Congregational are valued at $7,000; a Masonic Hall at $1,000; and a county court house, solid stone, at $60,000. The city marshal is paid $40 per month; common labor receives $2.00 and $2.50 per day; skilled labor $3.50 to $4.50; man and team $5. The city owns its own gravity water system and supplies private families at the rate of $1.25 per month. The principal industries are rock quarrying, lumbering, salmon fishing and farming. St. Helens has a rock quarry near the town, bank, three general stores, grocery, drug store, blacksmith shop, newspaper, confectionery, two saloons, and one meat market. Finest sawmill site on the Columbia River is located here. The city needs a milk condenser, iron smelter, sash and door factory, and an electric light plant. The postal receipts for the quarter ending December 31, 1907, were $281.67."

The Commissioner speaks of Houlton as follows:

"Houlton, Columbia County, incorporated in 1904, covers an area of three-fourths mile square and has a population of about 300. The valuation of town property is $150,000, without a dollar of indebtedness. It is situated on the Northern Pacific Railroad, one mile west of the Columbia River. The altitude is ninety-three feet. One public school house is valued at $1500 and two teachers are employed at $40 and $65 a month. Two churches, Methodist Episcopal and Free Methodist, are valued at $2,000, and the city jail at $150. The city marshal receives $15 per month. Common labor receives a daily wage of $2, skilled labor $3.50 to $5 and man and team $5. The town gets its water supply for $1.25 to $2.50 per month from St. Helens, where the plant is operated. Principal among the industries are lumbering, quarrying and salmon fishing. Iron ore of a first class quality is plentiful in the surrounding territory. The town has two general merchandise stores, three saloons, three hotels barber shop, bakery, restaurant, two blacksmith shops, stave factory. Three saw mills, three rock quarries making Belgian blocks, and logging railroad, employing seventy five men are located near the town. Houlton has three lodges, Odd Fellows, Rebeccas, Artisans and Women of Woodcraft, and a live Commercial Club. The postal receipts for the quarter ending December 31, 1907, were $308.58."

HIS "SINGLE STANDARD"

In his thinking Mr. Cleveland was no respecter of persons, and yet a respecter of every person, some writer has called him "the incarnation of law." True as this is, it is too abstract, for he was something more tangible. He was the embodiment of justice. From one point of view it made no difference at all to him who was helped or hurt or what was the vastness or littleness of the interests affected. It made all the difference to him that, whether a nation or its humblest inhabitant was affected, whether one dollar or millions were at stake, every question should be thought out deliberately and settled solely on the one principle that every man should be actually accorded the equal and exact justice he was entitled to receive. Old, trite and homely truth—and to him the one same invariable "single standard" for every human being, high or low, not only in personal dealings, but in the world of society, in fiers and politics also. It is this which explains the rigor of his earnestness when he investigated little matters, for to him they were as great in principle as the big matters.—Exchange.

Obituary

Noble Condon Ewing was born near DesMoines, Iowa, Dec. 22, 1871, and died Dec. 23, 1908, at Toledo, Oregon, age 37 years 1 day.

Mr. Ewing has for several years been a great sufferer from Sciatic rheumatism. The cause of his death was a hurt received in a logging camp at Clifton, Oregon, which resulted in paralysis of the brain. The third stroke came about an hour before he died. He seemed to realize that the time was near and told his sister, Miss Mary Ewing, and prepared for death. Miss Ewing was the only one of the family at his side but the people at Toledo were very kind and did all in their power for the dying man and bereaved sister. The lodges and lumbermen showed due respect.

Mr. Leo Bateman accompanied Miss Ewing to Portland where they joined the family, Mrs. N. J. Ewing, mother, Samuel Ewing, uncle, Mrs. Lilly McLane, sister, Mrs. Matt Hoar, sister, and Mrs. J. G. Watts, sister.

It is a consolation to the mother to be able to say that her son had never in all his life spoke one unkind or cross word to her.

The burial took place at Mayger, Oregon in the family plot by the side of the father, on Christmas day. The people of Mayger were tender and true to their old neighbors, putting aside festivities to give aid. Rev. Miller, of Portland, officiated.

"There is no death! What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life-elysian,
Whose portal we call death."

The Launching of the Years

Just where the path of long Today
Verged on the brink of Tomorrow,
Where the misty veil obscured from view
The Kingdom of Joy and sorrow,

When the hour of midnight nearer drew
And the busy world lay sleeping,
Along the trodden path of Time,
An aged seer was creeping

His flowing beard, like driven snow
Hung o'er his heaving bosom,
And silver locks his sad face crowned,
Like foam-wreathes on the ocean.

Close to the brink of the River Time,
He lay his scythe, all tarnished,
And bowed his head, as he sadly lived
Again the days that had vanished.

And as he mused o'er the dear, dead past,
In his heart for his youth still mourning,
A merry elf from the darkness rose,
As silent as sun at the dawning.

No tinge of sadness marred his brow,
Where the golden ringlets nestled.
The frost of care had fallen not,
Nor pain his young heart wrestled,

He grasped the scythe, and merrily hurled
It into the rushing current,
Which bore it on and out of sight,
Away with the surging torrent.

And he laughed in glee at the mischief
wrought,
This little one so merry,
But the old year sighed as he bowed his head,
Low, low, o'er his heart so dreary.

From out the darkness and the chill
A tiny vessel plying,
Touched its keel on the shore below,
To bear the year now dying.

Into the vale of the long dead past,
Where the shades forever are lowered,
Where o'er the mounds of other years,
Dark vaults for ages have towered.

But hark! afar on the midnight air
From the height of some lofty tower,
Twelve ringing strokes pealed out—and ceased
Tolling the midnight hour.

One sad look back, one glance ahead,
Then down to the craft he totters,
And the old year launches on the tide
Of Time's swift, ceasless waters.

And now he reigns, the infant year,
With heart so light and merry,
But who upon his youthful head,
The weight of the world must carry.

Farewell to thee, oh year now gone,
A welcome to thee who art here.
And may God's blessing pave with light,
The path of the dawning year.
