Stu says there are now 50-60 of these machines at bars, taverns, restaurants and amusement arcades throughout the United States.

There is no evidence yet that premarital counselors are using them, but the product is still in its rollout stage.

They retail for $599, which is slightly less than six sessions with a relationship counselor.

More information is available at kissmeter.com.

In other Stu news, the renovation of the cuckoo clock façade outside the theater he owns in Mount Angel is not yet completed. He got sidetracked with other projects.

But he hopes to complete the job in the fall.

You'll know it's done when the little bird pops out.

Seeking connections

Finding a parallel between desert-set Christmas Valley and Douglas fir-trimmed Silverton is a tough task.

For starters, look at population and landmass: Silverton houses well north of 9,000 folks inside a tidy 3.5 square miles; Christmas Valley's host Lake County holds south of 8,000 spread out over 8,358 square miles – yes, fewer than one human per square mile.

Further that juxtaposition by considering that Lake County's "hub" and county seat, Lakeview, contains roughly 2,300 of the county's denizens and is situated polar opposite to Christmas Valley; Lakeview nears the county's California-border end while CV tucks up 100 miles north toward the Central Oregon stretch of its boundary.

Some parallels: the surrounding Willamette Valley grass-seed production nears peak production – and sneezy pollen – season, while sitting at Silver Creek Coffee Crawford describes Christmas Valley alfalfa and hay, urged along by economical and ecological pivot irrigation systems, yielding serious tonnage that's shipped globally from its remote Lake County environs to varied and distant points around the world.

Crawford publishes the monthly "Community Breeze," from Christmas Valley, has it printed about 95 miles northwest in Bend, then mails it to 1,265 deliverable addresses in the northern region of Lake County.

By Tuesday she had put the June issue to bed, sent it to Bend, and had some time to get out and explore a bit, luring her to Silverton. She doubled the opportunity by trailing her son, Stephen, who just purchased an orange 1987 GMC Blazer in the area.

Terry pointed out that it's a good idea to have
