"Silverton is again at a turning point of fighting for its 'dignity' and to maintain Oregon's respect for Silverton as being a special community," Gene noted. "One immediate issue is the sustaining of significant trees that have been allowed to live among us for decades, growing in stature and symbolic awe; even avoiding the lumberman's and wood chopper's axe, the original economic foundation of our community."

» Scott Walker, incoming president of the Silverton Lions Club, dropped by to ask for assistance.

The service organization is seeking ideas for a Legacy Project to commemorate the 100th anniversary of Lions International, founded in 1917.

The Silverton Lions, in their seventh decade, want the community to suggest a need to fill, be it with a service project (eye tests for school children) or construction project (building benches for a new stretch of sidewalk).

"We want people to be creative," Scott said.

Among the ideas he tossed out was converting a little-used horseshoe pit into a bocce court.

Ideas and contact information can be sent by mail to P.O. Box 552, Silverton 97381 or by email to silvertionlions100@gmail.com. Deadline is July 15.

Teacher

el skills rather than the ability to memorize facts or deduce answers from lists," Bolin said. "More importantly, our students deserve tests that give them the opportunity to show what they know and can do. Smarter Balanced tests go above and beyond filling in multiple choice bubbles and actually showcase students' thoughts and explanations for how they solve problems."

To gauge students' ability to analyze information, think critically and communicate their knowledge, the system requires students to solve real-life tasks. Problems are encountered, however, when teachers don't fully understand the test's design or what is required of the students to successfully complete it.

To alleviate teachers' apprehensions, WestEd, a non-profit research and development agency, worked with Stanford Center for Assessment, Learning and Equity to develop the Building Educator Assessment Literacy (BEAL) project. This series of educator workshops was created to improve classroom instruction by providing teachers with in-depth, hands-on training that helps them to better understand performance assessment and how it relates to their teaching.

"We realized we needed to listen to the teachers and help them focus on what's best for their students and their learning experience," WestEd Senior Program Associate Jessica Arnold said. "Through these workshops, we have the opportunity to make sure teachers can make the best of the new (Common Core) curriculum.

A recent report published by WestEd comparing pre- and post-workshop educator surveys shows a significant increase in the understanding of Common Core and how the Smarter Balanced assessments connect to student readiness and classroom teaching. Teachers noted that the training helped to clarify the tests and they became more comfortable with how and what Smarter Balanced tests measure.

"I'm really proud of the results," Arnold said. "This change can be overwhelming for teachers and (the BEAL) program takes the mystery out of it."
