Campos, stopped into White Oak Wednesday to adorn the exhibit's altar, items upon which included pan de los muertos or the "bread of the dead."

"Our goal is to get people involved," Lori said. "This is a great way to blend art with creating an awareness of (Somos).'

The window to check out this display is open, but it closes soon - on the day of the dead - as the décor of other seasonal celebrations inevitably unfold over the course of autumn. White Oak hours are 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Wednesday through Sunday. Call 503-931-4517, email thewhiteoakgallery@gmail.com or visit www.thewhiteoak.info.

The White Oak exhibit aptly coincides with autumn's natural exhibition of color, an especial boon to backroad cruisers; another Creekside topic of the day. Lori and rural Clackamas County resident Tom Kane discussed the scenic bounty presented just outside the various east-valley towns of the region. Tom lives north of Highway 211 in the vicinity of Meridian and Sconce roads, a locale that regional road trippers may map out as a triangular equidistant west of Yoder and Needy. Tom road-tripped down to Silverton as part of his campaign: he's running for Oregon District 18 House of Representatives.

ties. Salem, with its population of 160,000, is the largest city for which Mathiesen has worked. Before that, she was the city administrator in Falls City, population 947, for two years, and a management analyst for Cornelius, population 12,000, for six years.

Her first municipal job was in North Plains, population 2,000, where she worked as an office support specialist. Before that, she worked in banking. She holds a bachelor's degree in Public Administration from the University of Phoenix.

"You can tell by my resume that I tend to like tight-knit communities and smaller towns," Mathiesen said, noting that Mt. Angel's reputation as a solid, stable city convinced her to apply for the manager's job late in the five-month search process. She was one of three finalists competing for the position.

"We like her background - she has a diverse background," said Mt. Angel Councilor Pete Wall. "She interviewed very well, and she seems very open to becoming part of the community.'

Mathiesen said she'd like to move to Mt. Angel if she can find the right house. Currently, she and her three dogs live in Canby. She's been there for a year and is accustomed to moving as necessary. Growing up, she and her family moved often, though always staying within rural Washington County, she said.

A constant in Mathiesen's life has been her love for animals. She can recall a time when, as a child, she belonged to nine 4H clubs at once. She landed her first job at age 17 and has worked full-time ever since. When she's not at work, she enjoys riding horses, gardening and reading.

In Mt. Angel, Mathiesen is strategizing about how best to get acquainted with the community. She will begin meeting with city staff and councilors this month. Also, she will look at the "to do" list generated at the council's 2016 goal-setting session. She also plans attend chamber meetings and other local events, including school functions.

"It's important to get a feel for what the council wants," Mathiesen said. "They've done goal-setting, so it's my task to build off that."

School, Tom clipped his hours down a tad this fall so he could pound the pavement and knock on doors as part of his campaign. District 18 is a "dual-county" district, and he's quite familiar with the Clackamas end of it and is spending more time in Marion County to meet people and hear their thoughts and conversations.

Wednesday also coincided with the Silverton Grange's "Meet the Candidates' Forum," moderated by Lee Mercer, and imparted to the Creekside Chat by Jan McCorkle.

"I've been knocking on a lot of doors and going all over the place," he said. "I'll be at Mt. Angel Towers later today and at the candidate forum tonight."

Tom said a frequent concern he hears in the Molalla area is the state of the economy and jobs. In Silverton, a topic he's heard come up a lot is lamentation of this past year's legislative action taking annexations off the ballot and essentially out of the hands of resident constituents.

As a teacher, Tom said he'd like to see resources dedicated toward decreasing class sizes and increasing graduation rates. Other issues close to heart are addressing the needs of working families, living-wage jobs, career technical education, climate change and requiring large corporations to pay their fair share.

Learn more about Tom on his website, www.tomkaneforstatehouse.com, look him up on Facebook or give him call at 503-988-1838.

By the way, if you are thinking about voting for Stu Rasmussen as a write in for the open Silverton City Council seat, you can do so without worries of a wasted vote.

Stu stepped into the coffee house to get some late morning energy and stopped by to chat for a moment before heading back to work. A part of the conversation touched on the upcoming elections.

As confirmed by Silverton City Clerk, Lisa Figueroa, there are currently two candidates running for the council; two incumbents with expiring terms, while another incumbent whose term is expiring chose not to run again. So in a reverse-musical-chair scenario the panel has two vying for three seats. A number of people have queried Stu, asking if he would serve on the council if written in.

The short answer is yes, Stu will serve if written in. So if you'd like to see the former mayor back in a position to serve Silverton, put it on the ballot and your wish may be served.
