Far-flung ORCA students gather twice each year

JUSTIN MUCH
STAYTON MAIL

These students are spread out all over the state as they tend to their school-year studies.

But a couple of days out of the year many of them meet their fellow school and "class" mates in one big gathering, like this one held last month in Mill City.

The September celebration was one of two annual all-school events hosted by Oregon Connections Academy, allowing students to meet in-person their teachers and classmates from around the state.

The school reports an enrollment of more than 4,000 K-12 students this year, a student body hailing from all points Oregon.

"The ORCA Open House gives students and parents a chance to put faces to names for their teachers and classmates they may be interacting with in the virtual classroom environment," said Allison Galvin, ORCA's executive director. "All-school activities like this give our students a unique opportunity to see that they are part of a broader school community and connect with a diverse group of students from across the state."

The open house mixed mingling with some fun and educational opportunities, including a book fair, and school pictures. Students also got a chance to don school colors as attendees were provided T-shirts.

The spring version of ORCA's all-school-invited event takes place at Salem's Riverfront Park. There are other outings: throughout the school year ORCA sponsors more than 200 field trips in various locations around the state.

Anyone interested in the school or its curriculum is encouraged to visit www.OregonConnectionsAcademy.com or call (800) 382-6010.

License now required for Mt. Angel businesses

CHRISTENA BROOKS
SPECIAL TO THE APPEAL TRIBUNE

Businesses in Mt. Angel haven't been required to register with the city — until now.

The city council voted unanimously on Oct. 3 to require businesses operating within the city limits to buy a $50 business license.

Those affected include traditional brick-and-mortar businesses, as well as some home businesses. Non-profits would be exempt, except for those that serve food or liquor "on an ongoing basis," according to the new ordinance.

In discussion, councilors said the licenses will help city staff, police officers and local fire fighters keep track of what businesses are operating in the city, where they are, and whether they are safe. Without a licensing requirement, city government doesn't have a formal way to know these things, they said.

"I think the information itself would be good to have," said Council Chairwoman Kelly Grassman. "I think this has way more positive effects than negative."

Mt. Angel incumbents re-running, one seat empty

CHRISTENA BROOKS
SPECIAL TO THE APPEAL TRIBUNE

MT. ANGEL — Mayor Andy Otte, Council President Kelly Grassman and Councilor Pete Wall are all running uncontested in the Nov. 8 general election.

The council seat held by Darren Beyer, who didn't file for re-election, will be empty in January unless voters write in another candidate who will accept the job. It's a four-year unpaid position, as are those being sought by Grassman and Wall.

The mayor's job is a three-year post.
