and the rest of the world,” Brentano said. “This bridge has a regional impact and we believe it’s necessary for this area to survive and thrive.”

Cameron outlined economic development initiatives in Santiam Canyon, North Marion County, and Salem-Keizer, while advocating a dedicated patrol district in east Salem that would add ten deputies.

“This will free up deputies to serve our rural communities; Public safety always has to be our priority as elected officials,” Cameron said.

He also lauded Marion County’s agricultural production, tops in the state, and stressed investments in agricultural technology. As an example, he pointed to a $30 million blueberry processor located near the Cascade Highway and Silver Falls Highway intersection.

“This thing can recognize which blueberry is a fresh blueberry, which one is going frozen and which one is going into juice,” he said. “That is the kind of technology that we are going to have to continue to invest in...to make our agricultural community competitive with the rest of the world.”

Carlson focused on public safety, homelessness, and mental health. Marion County allocates approximately 78 percent of the general fund budget to public safety services.

The county is working to connect certain non-violent offenders with treatment, housing, and health services in lieu of jail. The county is also working with Mid-Valley Community Action Agency and others to open a shelter for runaway and homeless youth.

“We’re diverting low-level offenders from prison. We’re reducing recidivism for people who have been incarcerated, we continue to do that. And we are supporting victims of crime,” Carlson said. “All those are the essential parts that go together.”

Another initiative strives to divert mentally-ill cases from county jail and prioritizing jail stays for people who are higher safety risks to the community. She noted that 70 percent of the jail population is awaiting trial.

“Many of them are there because they are unable to make bail,” Carlson said. “People are in jail based on the ability to pay. That doesn’t make sense. We really need to figure out who stays in jail based on whether they’re going to show up for trial, and whether they are a risk to the community.”

time and enjoy the visitors from all over the world,” Janet Thomas added.

Volunteers are a welcome sight, especially this time of the year as the days count down toward peak season.

“We are getting ready for our season,” said Lou Nelson, president of the Friends of Silver Falls State Park. Most of the 1.3 million visitors come during a six-month period. “It gets really busy up there between April through October. Normally we like to have about 28 volunteers and right now we have about 11.”

Nelson said Jim is a member of the Friends board of directors as well as a volunteer, working at the store on Fridays.

“Both Janet and Jim also volunteer at the park’s annual events and park promotions,” Nelson said. “Janet and Jim have lovely handmade items on consignment at the store.”

“Jim makes birdhouses and walking sticks, and he also loves to take photos of the park. Janet makes Christmas ornaments out of cork in the shape of reindeer, trees, and mice. Her American flags made of cork and decorative kid’s T-shirts are also popular.”

Nelson described the Friends of Silver Falls State Park mission as one that supports educational and interpretive opportunities for park visitors and promotes the preservation and protection of the park, which is Oregon’s largest state park and served more than 1.3 million visitors last year.

Friends funding sources primarily come from Nature Store sales.

Moreover, it’s a pleasant, rewarding contribution.

“(Jim and Janet Thomas) enjoy working with a nice group of people who make up the other Friends volunteers,” Nelson said. “Giving back to the community and local area that they have come to love since moving to Oregon is another reason they volunteer at the park.”

Jim Thomas agreed.

“I can sure say that I thoroughly enjoy volunteering up there, but we could use more of them,” he said

Additional store volunteers are needed at the park. Anyone is interested should contact Elaine at 503-873-8735, or admin@friendsofsilverfalls.net.
